Church Dedication.

Next Sunday morning, the new Congregational church is to be dedicated, the services to be conducted by Rev. Dr. Fairfield, pastor of the Congregational church at Manistee. Dr. Fairfield was president of Hillsdale college twenty years, and chancellor of Nebraska state university five years, and has almost a national reputation in the work of the Congregational church. The services will doubtless be interesting, and a general invitation is extended to the public to be present.

If you should see a fellow around here with blood in his eye and a chip on his nose, and should ask him what is the matter, he probably would answer, "the boarding gloves have arrived and pass right along. John Lawton better skun this place, for there are more boxers here to the square inch than in any other part of the country but there is not quite so many now as there was before the panic came.

Marvelous Engineering.

The London Inner Circle railway is a marvelous feat of engineering, says the Philadelphia Press. It runs throughout its entire distance through the busiest center of the largest city in the world, and the operations attending the excavation and construction have proceeded without serious accident or interruption of business or travel. Quicksands have been passed through, beds of coal divers spanned, lofty warehouses and massive buildings supported, while their foundations have been undermined, and an intricate network of gas and water pipes successfully supports have been established to support them from below. Added to this, the main sewers had several times to be reconstructed. Day and night the work has been carried on for several months, and now the engineers are able to announce that their remarkable undertaking is complete. The laying of the rails and the building of the stations were the only portions of the immense work that remains to be done, and in a very short time trains will be passing through the whole of this wonderful subterranean road.

Munich has the largest beer cellar and the best beer in Europe. The latter runs to lager, tart and mild. The former sells for 3 cents a quart, and is common to see a man at dinner time drain off three quart mugs at a single draught, thinking that we are a hog. If you see a procession of people with any street and follow it. It will lead you to a beer garden.

WHEN TO USE THE LASH.

Mr. Henry Bergh Points Out the Advantages of the Whipping-Post.

"There is a marked decrease in the number of cases of cruelty to animals," said Mr. Henry Bergh to a reporter. "Drivers seem to be getting more careful to their beasts; they understand that horses are property and that it is to their interest not to maltreat them. Then again, these burly, cruel fellows have learned that they can not whip a horse with a bar of iron without danger and almost certainty of arrest. I must say that fear has a great deal to do with the increased kind treatment animals are receiving. I cannot attribute the cause entirely to a better motive. In curbing the cruel passions of a man toward the brute, it naturally makes him better toward his family and more humane generally. Yes; the fear of punishment is the most effective method of subduing the humane emotions, except in that large class who have had a moral education or training.

"A few years ago cock-fighting and dog-fighting were common in this city. I have stopped all of that inhumanity, and the only places where they dare attempt to carry it on openly are Hunter's Point; and even there, among the roughs and refuse of this county's scum, we go and stop them. Such men, with brutal passions and debased intellects, can only be taught cruelty by fear. They are of the men who whip their wives, and for such men we would recommend the whipping-post. True, it is a very severe remedy; but if they refrained from whipping their wives they would get whipped. The whipping-post should not be used as often as one would suppose, but it would serve as a terror, and there would not be so much whipping. No, it would not break a man's pride or degrade him. He is already degraded and has no pride to be hurt by his wife. This would put pride and spirit into him, and make a better man of him. While in the orient I conversed with the Turks who did the flagellation. They told me that it is very rare that a man has to be whipped twice, and that it at once takes the brutal element out of him. Burglars and robbers should be used that way. Look at Delaware, they would brave a cholera district before they would step in that state, for they will not even travel through it—go around it.

"No, I do not think whipping too severe for a man who brutally beats an animal. God gave the animal feeling and no man reason. If he abuses his reason he should be made to suffer. Of course, I refer to extreme cases of cruelty. We have had very few such cases of late. Our greatest trouble is with some of the surface horse-car lines. They put on their worst stock at midnight, thinking that we are asleep. We often surprise them at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning by taking out a lash-laden horses and causing a cessation of cars. They soon send good ones. Then we have a great deal more trouble with cats and dogs, especially this season. People going out of the city for a few weeks lock their cats in the house, leaving them no food or water. They think the cats can catch sparrows, and they naturally want to starve to death on their return. In a few days the cats begin caterwauling, and the neighbors come to us with complaints. We get the key of the house, send an agent and liberate the imprisoned felines.

"The other day one attempted to get rid of a tenement-house while the family had gone to Coney Island to give the children a chance to clean the house of vermin. A great jumped twenty-five feet on the back of another house, and then rolled off into the area-way and was killed. Eleven days afterward the cat was accidentally seen, and a report was made to this office. We splived two hours, sent a man up to rescue the prisoner, and lived seven days without eating. Dogs are also locked up in families going out of the city for a few days. The dog naturally feels lonesome and begins to howl, and the good neighbors come to us. It is to be hoped that people will never learn the art of packing up dogs and cats during their absence. It is not only cruelty to the animals, but to the neighborhood."—New York Mail and Express.

A Good Pavement.

New York has tried every variety of pavement on Fifth Avenue—wood, asphalt, square block, cobble-stone, and each in turn has proved unsatisfactory and given complete satisfaction, each one given to one or more objections, as, for instance, wood, too costly, or possessing some other defect, says the New Orleans Democrat. The same may be said of any other large city. Losses carried over this matter for years, and parts spent millions of francs paving the streets and then tearing up the pavements, because they did not suit. There is no point in which the public is more interested than this, and there is nothing more unsatisfactory than its efforts to secure a pavement which will not even travel through it—go around it.

POLITICAL NOTES.

The following from a republican exchange is refreshing, especially when we consider that three months ago, nearly all republicans were predicting the utter ruin of this country in the event of the election of a democratic president: "Now that the New Year has come, grumblers, prophets of evil and those commercial dyspeptics who see ruin staring the nation in the face would better go into retirement and give the country a season of rest. The unlimited resources of this country and the natural advantages enjoyed, are certain to make us a prosperous people, though subject to periods of depression as are all countries, and when the agitator, the reformer, the jaundiced exponent of the commercial wrath to come will lie themselves into the mountains back of Hopeldiam and give honest labor and honest capital a chance to combine for the prosperity of the people there will be a business revival that will astonish the world, and we shall become strong and robust, and every branch of industry will soon be pushed to its utmost capacity. The hollow-breasted, wild-eyed disseminators of unrest and discouragement should be promptly relegated to back seats, or permanently removed. Of their croakings the people have had enough."

THE GUTTER HERO.

BY WILLIAM LYLE.

Into the gutter he waded,
To splash in the muddy rain;
Scum was his raiment and covered
With many a greasy stain;
But 'cool-mak- the little hero,
And under his ragged vest
He carried a soul of honor,
Pure as humanity's best.

Into the gutter he waded,
And missed with his wire bare feet
A pocket-book stored with riches
Close in the rain-washed street.
"Money" could be no temptation,
And those in the humper pelt
A mean to be passed—that he conquered,
And headed a boy mean.

All blindly he sought the owner,
An hour or more he searched—
The thrill in his heart repeating
"Happier a thousand-fold."
"What! keep what in the gutter?
"Thank some one little man?"
Oh, then his heart grew paid him,
And all the little rest can.

Yes, honesty in the gutter,
Think you I'm merely here?
Most common and silly even it be it,
Can grandeur improve its mean?
Mid the poor soul in life's desert,
Hungry and cold I ough for he,
Have we built just on his record
Because of his pedigree?

Honor is bound to no station,
Honesty shows no crowd,
And many a noble spirit
Is hid by the rags of need.
The man of the world may marvel,
But it's purely a gutter-bred
To mean a royal heirs,
Heart-warmed by the breath of God.

A GREAT TEMPTATION.

BY LILY M. CLERY.

If any one was to blame, it was Clemence Arlington, who had first conceived the idea. But this young lady, beauty, believer, only child and mistress of her father's house, was by no means accustomed to having her plans thwarted. It would have been absurd for Fannie Rae to have opposed them. Fannie was a lately acquired protégée, whom Miss Arlington delighted on various occasions to caress, shower favors upon, swear by in matters artistic, and even to patronize. Six years previous the two had been school friends; that was before Fannie had come to the most terrible experience of her life. She had often entertained Clemence at her suburban home, which Clemence had declared a most pretty and fascinating place. Later on, Miss Arlington, duly chaperoned, was sent abroad to complete her education, and the two lost sight of each other for a space of three years. During this time Fannie's reverses swept the Rae's pennyless; father and mother succumbed to the shock, and Fannie stood facing the world a homeless orphan. Accustomed to self-help from her twelfth year, she had forthwith set out for the city. She possessed considerable talent for art; had studied some and made fair progress. She chose this, therefore, as her profession.

She had been for some time employed as a clear little shop girl, with just enough pupils to keep her from starving, and just enough earnings to help Fannie to buy, when, one day, late November afternoon, Clemence Arlington walked in upon her. The contrast of Clemence, very tall and slender for her height, elegantly dressed and characteristic in manner.

The contrast Fannie's face between her hands and gave her a light kiss on either cheek; after which she decided that Fannie's unusual agitation of manner was very becoming, and, moreover, that Fannie, in her plain, black dress was beautiful as ever, with an indefinable, interesting sort of beauty, not unlike pink and white and Grecian features.

She had heard all about her friend's troubles, she had been looking her up, she said presently, since returning from Paris.

"And have not you succeeded?" she went on.

"Oh, fairly," said Miss Rae, trying to smile.

"Which means you are having an awfully hard time. Never mind, a real genius get that didn't. Well, tell me all about it."

And Fannie obeyed with some reluctance.

The sat concerning sound the early winter dusk had taken about them, and their cool hands sought each other's face. Then Miss Arlington suddenly remembered.

"How late it is! And there are a thousand things I want to ask you. Can't you come with me and—no? I'm going to the opera to-night; I want you to look at my dress and put on some songs—come, if you can stay all night. I'm sure."

And Fannie, of course, obeyed.

Two hours and half later found dinner in the Arlington mansion that evening, Fannie's after which Miss Arlington ceased to his library to write letters to Clemence from Fannie up to her own apartments. If Fannie had not been so interested it would have been Miss Arlington's way to insist upon her friends accompanying her if and the most city matron was to do so as Clemence. As it was, Miss Arlington dismissed her maid from the room immediately to the waiting and had out the short satin gown and all the fixings necessary.

"I can't talk to you at the," said the hostess, in a voice which could not be suppressed entirely, although she tried to, "and give you a satisfactory look, so you'll have to look at me. But I can hear everything to me."

Just that started as the clock struck 10. "I ought to be at my desk for this minute. I must run, or my pupils will have gone.

Clemence followed her up stairs. "I think he's much nicer if you need any help. She were quite pretty, and, indeed, a certain delicacy, accent over the whole, an unwonted refinement of whole carriage and dress.

Miss Rae kissed her friend's dimpled hand, murmuring a few words possibly, very tender ones that sounded too good to be repeated aloud.

Clemence, meanwhile, appeared to grow thoughtful.

"I have an idea about you," she said at length, as she drew on her long gloves.

"About me?"

"Yes; art is all very nice, but, as the poet says, 'art is long' and life is fleeting, and I have made up my mind to establish you; in other words, to get you a husband."

"A husband?"

"Yes; you are too beautiful and interesting to have your best years wasted. That's the trouble with all the famous women, don't you know—they're mostly old and hideous. It's because they have had to make slaves of themselves. Now, I would like to see you become famous, but you might as well enjoy life meanwhile. If you had a home of your own, you could get on twice as fast. You've got a great deal in your favor," Clemence went on, chuckling at it in a practical way. You are of good family, for one thing; they can't put up their eye glasses and say, 'Only fancy! Who is she?'"

Fannie smiled.

"I am sure I don't know how I should succeed, Clemence. I'm afraid my art would amount to very little, if it were a matter of necessity. Necessity is a great master."

"There, there! Don't say another word; I can't argue. I'll talk to you in the morning."

And Clemence, having caught up a ruby velvet carriage-ring, swept down to the drawing-room.

Miss Arlington was scarcely attentive to the music that evening. She conversed more than was her wont with the various gentlemen who came to pay their respects to herself and chaperon. Among these was one who seemed especially to claim her consideration a fine-featured man of perhaps 40. Clemence spoke with the freedom of long acquaintance.

"You have neglected us lately, Guy; yesterday papa was wondering why you stayed away."

"I have been out of town," said this gentleman. "Thing thought to call upon you to-morrow."

"Do, please do. I know papa will be delighted. Cannot you dine with us, quite alone, you know, at 7? Do!"

When upon he promised, and went away.

Clemence was very mysterious in her manner the following morning, while she breakfasted alone with Fannie Rae.

"I think I have found him," she said, after a time.

Fannie looked innocent.

"Found whom?"

"The happy bridegroom-to-be."

"Oh, Clemence!"

"Yes, dear; that is very nice and proper; that depreciation, that remonstrance. Nevertheless, I have found him. His name is Elliot Lindsey. He is an old friend of ours—what they call, in London, a 'city man.' He has about eight or nine thousand a year, besides, you know, good-looking, and clever. Papa thinks the world of him."

"He is—nice," said Fannie, rather feebly. "He is probably in love with you."

"No; you are on the wrong track. Besides, I've an interest elsewhere—in Paris just at present. But that is neither here nor there." Clemence went on in a long, fast stream to ward off interruption. "Before going any further, I want to ask you one serious question. Are your affections already engaged? Is there any one you care for?"

Fannie shivered.

"How could there be? I have lost the world I always lived in," she said, in her vacancy.

"I am very glad you are heart-free; you cannot help but like Mr. Lindsey, he is so—so—well, so Lindsey, you know. He is a traveled man; something of a connoisseur in paintings and that sort of thing. He is coming to dine with us to-night. You will be here."

"But—"

"Silence, my dear! No objections."

"I have nothing to wear."

"So much the better. Beauty unencumbered by full look out for that."

Fannie was not certain that she liked Mr. Lindsey. She said so to Clemence, when they were all over and they sat in Miss Arlington's boudoir discussing possibilities.

"You hardly looked at him," said Clemence, with an effort to express indignation. "You kept your eyelids down; I know," and she brightened somewhat, "your lashes are beautiful; so black, such pure gold! Perhaps after all you were wise. Your face looks best in meditation; sly minx, I dare say you've often let it droop before the glass."

"I have not," said Fannie, hotly.

Clemence laughed hysterically.

"Oh, he is handsome enough for a man. He is rather taller than his nose is not straight, and his eyes are expressive. I think he is turning gray. His manner is—"

"Alone! I was evidently mistaken in supposing you did not look at him."

"I helped you to look at him. He does not care for women, but he will care for you if he is thrown much in your company."

"But I it seems too much like matchmaking. And I can't—"

"No, I feel with the muzzle pointing toward, and are brought down and dispersed at a given signal. It may appear almost impossible for two men to aim at such a short distance; but this is not the case. Each of the opponents is desperately anxious to gain the least fraction of a second on his adversary, on the signal being given, as weapons are often brought down past—the gloom of a boarding house, the sleepy person from her rapids and what few orders she could obtain. She might fall ill, become destitute; and there, here was sure escape. Oh it was a great temptation, a great temptation! She was busy with conflicting thoughts.

She groped her way down to the hall, and entered the drawing-room.

"I asked for you," he said, with gentle emphasis, when they had exchanged greetings. "I think you must know why I asked for you." * * * She could only look at him while he spoke. They were sitting side by side upon a sofa, yet she felt as if she must shrink from him. * * * Especially if she meant to—deceive him.

She could hear other sounds than his low voice. She could hear the words of Clemence Arlington, uttered in a sort of monotone. She could see everything about her with unusual clearness. The luxury of the great drawing-room came upon her with a mighty pressure. Her heart went out with passionate yearning to all things beautiful. She craved delight and comfort as her due.

She heard him speaking, yet she could not look upon him. His voice, rather richly deep, was pure in light and warmth in which she rested, was like that of some one speaking sentence which should conquer her to everlasting darkness and misery.

"I hope," he said, "I hope that you can care for me."

And now she knew that she must speak. She turned her gaze to rest upon his face. How gray his eyes were! What an anxious light they held. She remembered that afterward, and she remembered, noting just how far lower grade as Brazilian coffee are called Rio coffee. The best coffee from Rio de Janeiro is called "Java, "Mocha," etc. Yet our planters send their coffee to Rio, and then it is all mixed together, the good and the bad, the coffee-bean and the pebble. When it gets here it is taken to large coffee houses, where the work done in Rio is undone, the coffee being sorted into different grades, and various names given it. The lowest grade is called "Rio." As a matter of fact, some of the best coffee we get comes from Brazil.—Science or de Mendonca, Brazilian consul.

"Johnny, do you know the tenth commandment?"

"Yesm."

"Can't."

"But you just said you knew it, Johnny."

"Yesm. I know it when I see it."—New York Sun.

A YEAR'S FAILURES

Tables Showing the Number and Location of Business Troubles of the Twelvemonth.

The mercantile agency of R. G. Dun & Co. has issued its annual circular figures for the year 1881. The compilation statistics shows the number of failures to have occurred throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada since the past year, together with the amount of liabilities. From the circular the following excerpts are made, which will be found interesting in business circles:

The record of failures each year during the twenty-eight years is compared by the statistics from 1857 to 1881, and they are interesting in that they consist of the relative losses by bad debts in the various years. They are as follows:

DUELING ON THE CONTINENT.

The Deadly Mode of Fighting Which Prevails in Russia.

Over five thousand duels occur annually in France alone. The enormous majority of these encounters occur between private soldiers. In every French regiment are to be found two or three first-rate swordsmen, commonly called fire-eaters, whose especial business it is to test the nerve of any recruit suspected of a deficiency of physical courage. On the most frivolous pretext the latter fastens a quarrel upon the unfortunate nouveau, and the unanimous voice of the regiment declares that honor demands bloodshed. The encounter takes place in the presence of four non-commissioned officers and the regimental fencing-master, who stands by, sword in hand, ready to carry any too dangerous thrusts. The weapon used in the early is the saber, and in the infantry the ordinary sword-bayonet, and the issue is generally harmless enough, although cases have been known of the latter himself coming to grief through a recruit going too far in his adversary.

In society, and especially among officers, duels are not entirely over the responsibility of the combatants. In the event of a fatal issue, the survivor is liable to suffer a term of open arrest in a fortress, varying from two to six months. A German officer thus finds himself placed in the dilemma of refusing to fight and being compelled to retire, or of fighting and running the risk of being placed under arrest for doing so.

In no country are duels more frequent than in Russia, especially since the Russians being, especially men in their cups, as quarrelsome among themselves as they are proverbially courteous to foreigners. The mode of combat usually adopted in that terrible country is a deadly one. Pistols are used at a distance of fifteen paces, with liberty to advance twenty paces each at a given signal, and to fire at will. Should one of them fall and miss, his adversary is entitled to approach the fallen man and complete his five paces before receiving the shot. Many cases have been known in which a duelist, although mortally wounded, has yet retained sufficient strength to take steady aim and fire with fatal effect. The most Russian poet, Pushkin, was killed in a duel in a manner, after severely wounding his antagonist.

In the Baltic provinces a system prevails which at first sight appears even more murderous. The adversaries are placed only three paces apart; the pistols are loaded with the muzzle pointing toward, and are brought down and dispersed at a given signal. It may appear almost impossible for two men to aim at such a short distance; but this is not the case. Each of the opponents is desperately anxious to gain the least fraction of a second on his adversary, on the signal being given, and weapons are often brought down with so hurried and violent a jerk that the bullets bury themselves in the ground. At a duel fought last year at Riga between an officer and a student in this fashion, three shots were exchanged without any result, while at the fourth discharge the student had the great loss of his right foot cut clean off by his opponent's bullet.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Grant's Going to West Point.

"It was a mere accident that put me into the army," said Grant to an old comrade. "I hadn't much fight in me, and didn't want to go to war. I thought of being a farmer, and I thought of going to sea; but of all the possible features I dreamed of when a boy, being a soldier was not one of them. I am not sure I had ever heard of West Point when my father told me to get ready to go on for my preliminary examination. This is the way it was: Our next neighbor's boy got a chance from our Congressman to go to West Point. He went, and failed to pass the examination—for physical reasons, I believe. He did not come home after that, and the family did not allude to his failure; but his father, who felt very sore about it, came and told my mother, confidentially, what was troubling her. Mother told him that my father wrote straight to our Congressman and got the chance for me. Oh, yes, I know that those who remember my boyhood tell about my firing a pistol without flinching when I was 2 years, and crying for more of it; but I don't think such tendencies were strong. I never thought of being a soldier. Going to West Point was just the accident I have told you."

"How came you to pass the examination?" asked my informant.

"Almost any boy can do that," answered the General. "I was 17 years old, and all that was required was some knowledge of reading, writing, spelling, and arithmetic to decimal fractions. If I was superstitious I should think there was some fatality in my getting to West Point, for when the war was over I figured up, and as near as I could find out, the little country village of Georgetown, Ohio, from which I went—a place of 500 people—sent to the war one full company, three Majors and two Generals, two Brigadier Generals, three Colonels, three or four line officers, and one private soldier. The latter deserted, I think. I had no very easy time of it at West Point. In a class of more than a hundred I was behind them all in almost everything. I never succeeded in getting near either the head or the foot of the class. I was within three or four files of the head in mathematics. I was at the head in horsemanship, but that didn't graduate me. Now, I believe, and within five

Touch the Children.

There is, probably, no hallucination more delusive as that which attributes to alcoholics drink a certain virtue, which it never possessed. After all the influences of the pulpit and the press, after all the warning examples of drunkenness and consequent dissipation, after all the testimony of science and experience, there lingers in the average mind an impression that there is something good in alcohol, even for the healthy man. Boys and young men do not shun the wine cup as a poisoner of blood and thought and the most dangerous drug that they can possibly handle, but they have an idea that the temperance man is a fogy, or foe to a free, social life, whose practices are ascetic, and whose warnings are to be laughed at and disregarded. Now in alcohol, in its various forms, we have a foe to the human race as subtle and so powerful that it destroys human beings by the million, vitiates all the processes of those who indulge in it, degrades morals, induces pauperism and crime in the superlative degree when compared with other causes, and corrupts the homes of millions.

It is a cruel thing to send a boy out into the world unthought that alcohol in any form is fire, and will certainly burn him if he puts it into his stomach. It is a cruel thing to educate a boy in such a way that he has no adequate idea of the dangers that beset his path. It is a mean thing to send a boy out to take his place in society without understanding the relations of temperance to his own safety and prosperity, and to the safety and prosperity of society.

What we want in our schools is to do away with the force of a pernicious example and a long cherished error, by making the children thoroughly intelligent on this subject of alcohol. They should be taught the natural effect of alcohol upon the processes of animal life. They should be taught that it can add nothing whatever to the vital forces or to the vital tissues, that it never enters into the elements of structure, and that, in the healthy organism, it is always a burden or disturbing force. (2) They should be taught that it invariably disturbs the operation of the brain, and that the mind can get nothing from alcohol of help that is to be relied upon. (3) They should be taught that alcohol inflames the baser passions, blunts the sensibilities, and debases the feelings. (4) They should be taught that an appetite for drink is certainly developed by those who use it, which is dangerous to life, destructive of health of body and peace of mind, and in millions of instances ruinous to fortune and to all the high interests of the soul. (5) They should be taught that the crime and pauperism of society flow as naturally from alcohol as any effect whatever naturally flows from its competent cause. (6) They should be taught that drinks is the responsible cause of most of the poverty and want of the world. So long as six hundred million dollars are annually spent for drink in this country, every ounce of which was made to the destruction of bread, and not one ounce of which has ever entered into the sum of national wealth, having nothing to show for its cost but diseased stomachs, degraded homes, destroyed industry, increased pauperism and aggravated crime, these legs should understand the facts, and be able to give them in their just respective proportion.

The national wealth goes into the ground. If we could only manage to bury it without having it pass further ward in the form of a poor man's dam through the confirmed lushes of our neighbors and friends, happy should we be. But the great, fearful curse demonstrates its real. Having reached us of it is to beg for a night's lodging. The widow and the fatherless look to us for they ask for bread. It seeks every home in the land, before it hurries it to the poor every where. Even the clever, hardworking man of prosperity must, sooner or later, pay his proportion of the enormous money from which the energy we can control the 3 concentration of money in the hands of the few is built up.

SPONGES.

A Place Where "sponging" is the Regular and Congenial Business.

There is no single industry of so much financial importance to Nassau, I think, as the sponge fisheries. "Sponging" is a regular business in Nassau, of such large proportions that a Sponge Exchange has been established, governed by rules on the plan of the Stock Exchange, and to do a sponge business successfully in Nassau a firm must be represented in the Exchange. Sponge is an important thing in Nassau. It is in plenty, of course, and cheap. You can squeeze lying in the streets and kicking about the wharves that in New York we would have to pay fifty cents or $1 for. Wherever sponge can be used in place of cotton or woolen cloths it is used. Kitchen mats—use sponges for "scrubbions," and frequently for "squeegees," are promptly attended to by sponges, and even for [illegible] Windows are invariably washed with them, glasses polished with them, and they are used for almost every conceivable purpose. Around the holes in the water are always two or three "mows" with long strings of them, trying in soil to be the Americans. Hardly any visitor leaves Nassau without taking a [illegible] of about fifteen sponges bought at a "ring" of about fifteen cents that stretched out far longer than my head, for "consumptions," or thirteen-inch and a half ones. They make very fine presents to give to your friends when you get home, they are so cheap, and a sponge is more valuable when you know it has just been brought by some one you know from the sponge fisheries.

The sponge of fact is composed of small structures ranging from ten to forty tons. Each sponge carries from four to six men, and in nice periodical trips out to the sponge beds round Andros, Andros Island and Exuma. The men do not care for them, as sponge fishers in the Mediterranean do, but use long handled tridges that on other boats can be seen out of the water. In this clear water they can see every inch of the bottom, and when their eyes grow sore or tired, and seeks bed of one chiefly, down it goes in the boat to which it belongs. Sponges are plenty in these waters, and are not more delicate, intelligent and human we see in shop windows. When I saw first from the water they look just more like a piece of raw liver than anything else I can compare them with. They are slippery, slimy, ugly, and usually brown, very much like the cover of a last year's bird's nest. Most of the sponges I saw were of a sort of dull, dirty

The old-established and rumor-ruffling banking house of John J. Cisco's Sons failed at New York, with liabilities of at least $2,500,000. John J. Cisco, founder of the house, died 31st March, and John A., his son, became the head of the firm. The fact that the firm did not do a speculative business to any great extent; that it received very large deposits from immaterable persons and corporations; that it had acted as fiscal agents for several railroads and as correspondents for several out-of-town banks; that it did a large business in issuing letters of credit to travelers in Europe; all these things made the failure a more than ordinary disaster. The interest was heightened by the additional fact that the firm acted as the bankers of the Trinity Church corporation, of which its founder was a prominent member, and at the time of his death he was the senior warden and personal friend of the Rev. Dr. Dix. Lewis May, the assignee, says the liabilities will exceed the assets by $1,000,000. It will be necessary to legislation if that was to be done. The next year he settled in Iowa and was employed as a porter at one of the hotels. He studied law in his leisure, and was admitted to the bar. Subsequently he removed to Fort Dodge, where he soon rose to prominence in his profession. He was elected a Representative to the Legislature, and was one of the leaders of the House. The Congregational Church Dedicated.

Last Sunday morning the new Congregational church was well filled with people of all denominations to witness the service and ceremonies of dedication. The service was opened with a brief prayer by Rev. C. F. VanAuken and followed with an appropriate selection by the Congregational choir assisted by the Apollo Quartette. The scriptural reading was by Rev. J. T. Iddings of the M. E. church, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. J. Kanagy. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by E. B. Fairfield, D. D., LL.D., of Manistee, from the text, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Psalm cxix. verse 18. This discourse was the best ever spoken of the real value and the divine authority of the bible to which we have ever had the pleasure of listening. All other books fade into insignificance under the Doctor's comparisons. At the close of the sermon, a statement of the condition of the building fund was made, showing a total expenditure of $3,500 for lot, building, fixtures, and furnishing. Of this amount $1,500 had been provided for, leaving an indebtedness of $800. Subscriptions were then received amounting to $450, and the morning service closed with a dedicatory prayer by the pastor, Rev. C. F. Van Auken.

In the evening, Dr. Fairfield talked one hour about his recent trip in Palestine, and especially of what he saw in Jerusalem. His rambles and explorations among the ruins of the temple, how he learned of the quarry from which the great blocks of stone were taken, and what he saw there, were intensely interesting, and the audience were disappointed when he announced the time to close, and called for the remaining $350 to free the church from debt. The amount was soon raised and the audience dismissed.

Dr. Fairfield carries his audience with him, and makes them almost see and feel the same sights and sensations as him-self throughit his discourse. In the travels from Joppa to Jerusalem, and in the ramblings about the latter city, there was a panorama from which the observer could not for a moment permit his attention to be diverted.

When all the circumstances are considered, the pastor and society have reason to feel proud of their work, and thankful to all who have so materially assisted in hastening its completion. Although it may not be so large and expensive a building as many others in northern Michigan, it is well constructed, well finished, and when the furnishings are complete it will be a very pleasant and comfortable house of worship.

Sensation at Lansing.

Our representative at Lansing, Mr. Hampton, is making quite a stir among the legislators by certain criticisms of the actions of representative Egan and others during the organization of the House, which appeared in last week's Independent. What the result will be is a question to be watched with interest.

Pending the investigation, Mr. Hampton will avoid further criticism. In his last letter he says: "Until the questions decided whether or not my holding a seat in the House prevents me from exercising my rights and duties as an editor, I shall withhold criticism, even upon those matters which in my opinion demand ventilation."

Dr. Reynolds Coming.

The Elk Rapids Progress says: "Dr Henry A. Reynolds, the well known temperance reformer began a series of temperance meetings in the town hall last Sunday afternoon. A fair audience was present at the close of this, the beginning of what has proved to be the most successful effort ever made in Elk Rapids in the cause of temperance. The afternoon meeting was only preliminary to what was to follow in the conduct of the meetings. In the evening the large hall was filled to overflowing, many being unable to get in. Dr. Reynolds is a forcible speaker, and his remarks were well received. His meetings will be continued during the week, and we hope they will understand thoroughly the effect before they cast their ballots either way."

G. W. Jeffories has a stock of meat which he is ready to cut for all his old friends and as many new ones as he can find. His mark it is about finished inside, and when his books are sealed we will have a very convenient, well finished place of business.

R. Coumbe & Son, have discovered yet another method of preparing the fine fish of these northern waters for the market, and it promises to be a very important branch of their already large business. The new preparation is fish salad. Every one likes chicken salad, but the great amount of trouble necessary to its proper preparation makes it a rare dish even on well furnished tables. Fish salad is prepared by R Coumbe & Son, is fully equal to any of the best salads and superior to most of them, and can be bought as needed for use in small quantities, for less than the cost of any choice salad to say nothing of the time and trouble spent in their preparation. Both the salad an I their special fish will soon be standard goods in all stocked family groceries especially in the larger towns and cities.

The Best Tobacco Pipe.

The white carbon pipe, porus and permeable to liquids, is put first, because it is a good absorber of nicotine; the metallic pipe is put last, because it allows all the noxious products formed during the combustion of the tobacco to reach the mouth of the smoker. The meerschaum, which immediately follows the clay pipe, deserves its place only on condition that it is not too old. If it is seasoned it is as bad as a wooden or porcelain pipe. The seasoning, of which pasts have sung, may be full of charms to the amateur; to the hygienist it simply indicates that the pipe has had its day, and is now saturated with tobacco juice, and that it must be replaced by another one, or be passed through the fire to purify it, as is done in the collectionneurs of Holland. Every old pipe, browned with long use, leaves on the lips and tongue an acrid and strong-smelling liquid, which irritates the tissues and corrodes the mucous secretions. When it has reached this condition the finest meerschaum is no better than the meanest scorch-throat.—Popular Science Monthly.

FAITH.

With one hand faith surpasseth doubt,
I stand and watch the tide go out—
That I will come back I say to you
I do not know, and yet I do.

At eventide I see the day
Put night on guard and go away.
Will morning come the miles to meet?
I do not know, and yet I do.

I see the trees that autumns bring,
Will we thine come with summer time?
I do not know, and yet I do.

We can not hoard records up and die,
Hath Heaven a higher use for us high?
In truth the valet it looks thereto;
I do not know, and yet I do.

THE SWAMP ANGEL.

BY WILL P. JOHNSON.

Harry Smith had had a standing invitation to visit an uncle—a farmer living near the Okaw River—and the spring of 18— he decided to make the long contended visit, get a much needed rest, do some hunting and fishing, and come back to town strong and brown, and ready for any amount of business. He was engaged in an office in the city at a nice salary, but his work kept him too closely confined, and so he decided on this trip, which was to last three months any way.

A description of him, as he is somewhat identified with this story, will not be amiss. He is a well proportioned young man of about twenty-eight years; is good looking, with a full dark eye, a heavy dark mustache shading his mouth, a well cut chin to tokening firmness. His general appearance is typical of the many live young business men to be found in our cities. This was his first visit to his uncle, Nathan Smith, so the country was strange to him. He was supplied with shooting apparatus, fishing tackle, etc. When he got off the train at a country station, he found his cousins Jarvis and Lizzie waiting for him. The three were soon driving homeward, rapidly getting acquainted with each other. The distance to drive was ten miles. After having driven some miles on the road they came up with and passed a one-horse buggy containing two women, one an elderly and the other quite a young lady. The elder of them kept on in the road, turning neither to the right nor to the left, nor looking at our friends as they drove past. The younger lady seemed not so indifferent, though she bestowed on them only one quick look, then turned her face away. In that one momentary look, however, she met Harry Smith's eye, and a quick flush came over her face. He noticed in that short seeming that she had a wonderfully pretty face, but that her clothing looked shabby and draggled—out of order. Of her beautiful face attracted him, and he eagerly inquired who she was.

"I believe her name is Scranton," said Jarvis. "They live down in the Okaw bottom. The old party is the swamp angel."

"The what?" queried Harry Smith.

"The Swamp Angel?" repeated Jarvis.

"What on earth is she called that for?" said Harry.

"Because she is so angelic," said Jarvis.

"Well, I think the younger one looks more angelic," said Harry.

"I will tell you how she got the name," said Lizzie. "She is such a cross old thing, won't associate with any one, nor ever has any visitors, and has just as little to do with other people as she can. So the boys dubbed her the Swamp Angel. She lives in the low lands along the Okaw River, on a farm that is nearly surrounded by swampy land."

"Well, is she a single woman? does she live all alone? and is she the young lady?" asked Harry.

"What a lot of questions all in a breath!" exclaimed Lizzie. "Give me time enough and I will try to answer them. I believe she is a widow, and, fortunately, 'that you are more interested in the young lady than the old.'

"I admit it," said Harry. "Now, go on; I am dying with curiosity."

"I thought only women were possessed of a dying curiosity," said Lizzie.

"We will say men are too, for the present, and to avoid discussing the subject," said Harry. "So proceed, fair cousin, and answer my questions."

"She claims to be a widow, and, excepting that she lives all alone and has no visitors, she came from the East some where, she inherited the farm from a rich old bachelor who was a relative. She is a queer genius, and she is queer. The girl, she says, is her niece, and she tyrannizes over her, and has turned her discontentedness to account in it, and will not allow her to go anywhere besides. She rents her farm to people living in the neighborhood; keeps only a horse and cow, and owns a gun and while she goes to town, or to the post office, and that is the balance of the time she stays at home appropriately doing nothing. She is a hateful old thing, she would be if I were an angel and I said so. She is perfectly able to do a share of the farm labor, and the work she has done is simply disgraceful.

"I don't suppose more that will do. Don't attempt to say any more, you seem to be amused, and how can you be entirely satisfied with that you would change the subject," said Harry.

"I suppose a woman must have curiosity to stop her," remarked Lizzie.

"Don't you mind that, Harry," quickly answered Jarvis.

"No, I don't," said Lizzie.

"Well, you see that the old fellow is a queer genius in his way, and he has a fancy for three cats, a dog, a pig, a cow, a horse, and a flock of chickens, and there and dropping his line into the water. He succeeded toward night—having started out soon after dinner—in getting a very nice string of fish, and so, quite well satisfied with his sport, started for his uncle's. He concluded the quickest and nearest way would be to leave the timber with which the river was lined, get out into the cultivated land, and cut across the fields. He soon came out into an opening, and, climbing an extraordinarily high rail fence, he found himself in a broad meadow, with a farm-house and barn only a few yards off. The house was a rather large, square frame building, needing paint and repair, but withal, quite substantial looking. He came up through the barnyard to a gate opening into the house-yard, and as he was feeling thirsty, concluded he would go inside the yard to an old-fashioned well which he saw there and get a drink. As he opened the gate a low, muffled growl greeted his ear, and an immense, tigerish-looking dog rose up not more than twenty feet away. He hesitated a moment; then he saw a young lady standing near the house looking toward him. Thinking that, of course, she would call the dog off, he started in, when she cried out, excitedly:

"'Don't come in! He will tear you to pieces!'

Instantly he sprang back through the gate, and none too soon, for at the same instant the immense mastiff made a lunge, and did not miss his coat tail more than four inches.

"'Don't attempt to come in again,' called the girl. 'I could not possibly keep him off. He won't bite me.'

"'Don't be alarmed,' said Smith, grimly. 'I am not coming in. There is not the least intention on my part of feeding myself to a dog.'

The girl stood where she was, making no further reply, and evidently embarrassed. Smith thought she acted somewhat queer, but he determined to get a drink, if possible, so he called: 'Since I may not come in, will you be so kind lady as to bring me a drink of water?'

Without replying by word she took up a tin dipper hanging by the side of the well-curb, and brought him it, filled with water. When he came close, he recognized her as the young girl he had seen on the road with the swamp angel. He was also astonished at first to take the dipper, but shortly staring into the prettiest eyes he had ever seen, as if entranced. Her eyes dropped, and she blushed deeply; then he came to his senses, and saying, or rather stammering, 'I beg your pardon, miss,' he took the dipper. Just at that moment the form of the Swamp Angel appeared in the doorway, and she called, angrily: 'Put that down in there, you old murderer, and I'll lay you out in short order,' muttered Smith, with his hand on the handled a murderous looking, muffled growl greeted his ear, and an immense, tigerish-looking dog rose up not more than twenty feet away. He hesitated a moment; then he saw a young lady standing near the house looking toward him. Thinking that, of course, she would call the dog off, he started in, when she cried out, excitedly:

Sweet Cider.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL: I am loth to speak on the use of "sweet cider" at all, because I have thought and still think that important question will be settled by the sensitive conscience and sterling common sense of our white ribbon element. But I see it has come to the front once more as boiled (sweet) cider, and On Duty thinks there are "ifs" to be observed. Now I can scarcely see where the "ifs" can come in this case, any more than they can in our use of the grape juice which our Christian sisters have learned to seal up so deftly against decay as a memorializing the sacrament of the Sacrament. Possibly unsandalinkbark is in calling one cider, and the other the juice of the grape. No one, it seems to me, can find any objection to our perfectly legitimate and conscientious use of the juice of the apple. And if we are to draw into our army that class who it would make such valiant addition, the farmers' wives, we must apply common sense views to common-sense every day things. That is, the jelly making, the apple butter, the vinegar, the mince ones, and such like, which the country folk must make, or see the product of valuable orchards go to waste.

Our pledge is against the use of any kind of cider as a beverage, and our teaching is plain and unequivocal always on that point; we have only the pledge and modify it for no one. Then, too, in our hygienic instruction we say partially fermented and partially decayed fools of all kinds are unfit for use, and give a sensible and plain reasons for such advice. There would be the same reasons for not using fermented prune or plum juice that there is against our use of fermented apple juice, having the pledge out of consideration. Hence I have thought the enlightened judgment and awakened moral nature of the motto editorial of our land would adjust their conclusions and mode of living to the spirit of our pledge. I learned to dislike the very manner of order in my childhood, and feel today that as to my home is violating the spirit of my pledge, but I would use the juice of the seeds of no other fruit in any way my judgment and taste dictated, and feel in no way culpable, as a "Crusader of Temperance Woman" and

She was extravagant—nine months ago, it cost over $100 to [illegible] in N. Y. Central to [illegible] adult. A year ago she was content to [illegible] to the tenth tenth of a river. A year ago [illegible] her—she was [illegible] in the pitch and [illegible] over with branches of trees and [illegible]wood. The natives soon [illegible] to [illegible] and at night the ingress, [illegible] to the water, or sled [illegible] the covering, and [illegible] smoked and [illegible] heapless at the bottom of the pit. She was allowed to lie there for a week. One month of the pit was again passed and her seven days she died in darkness without food or water. Such treatment every often kills a tiger and is the only known method of reducing them to the state of savage frenzy succeeding their capture to anything like submission.

When at last the coverings were again removed the [illegible] Empty was found to be anything but emaciated. She was, however, weak, and her [illegible] bounds in town for [illegible] of the pit were short at first, and grew shorter with every effort. Then the natives began to [illegible] her. It was hard and dangerous fishing, but scarcely more after more was dropped around her body, her fore legs were drawn firmly to her sides, and she was pinioned in a manner utterly comical and powerless. Other cords were thrown around her, and with her feet in the air and her head down, she was hauled to bamboo poles, and carried by a troop of men to the nearest embarkation. She had very little idea of [illegible] when she was placed on board ship and dispatched to Germany.

When she landed in Europe, however, she had quite recovered, and Mr. Rarey, who was living in Germany, was delighted with her appearance. He gave her the name of Empty, and sent her for passage to America. She is worth perhaps $3,500.—N. Y. Sun.

Taxes must increase in proportion to the increase of expenses. The way to lessen taxation is by practicing rigid economy in the conduct of public affairs.

The bill noticed in the Legislature amending the fish laws, and providing fish wardens, will contain a provision prohibiting the use of dynamite in fishing.

The people that leave Michigan and "go west" to find a better place usually return in a few months; provided they have money enough to pay their way back.

H. Lee Iddings received yesterday from M. J. Stackman, now in Florida, a box of very fine large sweet oranges, and the printer was remembered handsomely. Thanks.

G. W. Jefferis is now prepared with new tools, etc., to meet the wants of all old and new customers, and especially invites the people to call and see him in his new building. A good stock of meat on hand.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature to protect boat livery men making it possible to punish persons for hiring a boat, and then running away with it, or leaving it at where it will be damaged. Hitherto there has been no protection in this respect for persons who rented boats.

The stages running between Charlevoix and Petoskey are said to be models. They are real inclosed street cars—not Detroit street cars, but comfortable coaches heated by charcoal stoves, in which a man can take off his overshoes and overcoat and read his paper as easily as at his own fireside.—[Detroit Free Press.

Alden Chamberlain who was arrest we mentioned two weeks ago was examined last week and bound over for trial in the U. S. Court at Grand Rapids March 3d. The accusation, is based on the carrying by the tug Wright last fall the family and goods of a gentleman wishing to remove from Beaver Island to Cross Village, which it is claimed was done by the master of the boat privately and in matter of concealment and without the knowledge of Mr. Chamberlain.

The extra meetings continue with increasing interest. Great good is receiving from the labors. The Sunday school reports good work last Sunday; 112 present, with two new scholars. Preaching next Sunday morning and evening.

From Beaver Island.

On the 16th ult. we received our last mail, carried by Capt. Roddy, of the Schr. Tom Paine, from Harbor Springs. He had a hard time in crossing, sailing through large fields of ice, but finally reach Mr. Dormer's dock at 1 p m. Mr. Lindstrom, the light keeper, kept the light burning, until after Capt. Roddy's arrival.

The Schr. Hart, from Northport, bound for lake Erie, reached our harbor on Dec. 26th. She was loaded with provisions, etc. It took several of our men two days to get her up to the dock.

The Schr. C. J. Wells, that went ashore last fall on Whiskey Island reef, has gone to pieces. All the lumber drifted away, and the islanders did not get any.

So far the winter is a poor one for all concerned. There are several parties cutting ties and posts, and probably eight or ten cargoes will be got out this winter. The fishermen have not set any nets, but intend to if the ice makes.

We are generally healthy. No sickness at present, and only one death (John P. Gallagher, of consumption) since the close of navigation.

John Gallup is wintering on the island, and is now making fish-barrels at the rate of 40 a week, resting on Saturdays and Sundays. He intends to visit Charlevoix this winter.

M. F. O'Donnell teaches the school in Chandler township for three months. His roll contains 40 names, with more to come.

The inevitable tax gatherer is making his rounds, asking for five per cent on our capital, to contribute to the general fund of the town. This is not much, is it? But it is easily accounted for. Last year and the year before liquor was sold by two or more persons who did not pay the license or give a bond. If this license was paid it would save the tax payers at least $1,200. Our new county officers are going to look into this matter, and insist on licensed saloons or none at all. The following are the principal officers:

Judge of Probate, James Hanley.
Sheriff, John Connelly.
Clerk and Register, John Dudley.
Treasurer, Owen O'Donnell.
Prosecuting Attorney, Benj. T. Halstead.
Surveyor, Fred Bain.

The mail goes in a small boat manned by Paul LeBlanc and Wm. Gibson, who will carry our mails for the winter.

A lyceum and literary society was organized at the school house last Saturday evening, with the following officers: President, Geo. C. Is it too late to begin to prepare to make Feb. 22d the grandest jubilee our people have ever known? The unveiling of the Washington monument, towering above all the domes of the world, should rouse the patriotic fire in the hearts of our nation, to make that day one worthy our glorious land and its noble sire.

The Manistee Advocate comes enlarged as a five column folio, and neatly, under the management of O'Mara Bros.

The Boyne Statesman made several noticeable improvements last week increasing the quantity of reading matter and appearance of the paper very much.

The Big Rapids Current and Wolverine Herald have discarded the patent ready-print insides, and are now purely local papers printed all at home at a reduced price.

The New York World is now increasing the lead over the Sun in the race of circulation, which reported from the attitude the latter paper assumed during the presidential campaign. Hundreds of Democrats in this city have become more Worldly inclined. The Sun helped the Republican party and now Democrats are willing the World should help itself.

One of the cleanest, most exclusive little annuals we have seen is a 16 page issue just received from the editor of the Chicago Daily News. In addition to the usual features of a bloody almanac, it gives a statement of the growth of the Daily News, gain of Chicago, political platforms of the complete vote on president by counties, population of states, state and territorial governments, congress, and a mass of other matter of value to people generally. There is also a well written illustrated article describing a visit to the Daily News office written by Mrs. Clara Dorr Bell. It is printed on heavy calendered book paper, and sold for the low price of ten cents per copy.

The February number of the Cottage Hearth is at hand. The frontispiece entitled "The Best Valentine" shows a pretty girl, warmly enveloped in cloak and furs, making her way through a fierce snow-storm with a basket on her arm. Mrs. Diaz has a new "Bedquilt Story" in her usual old-fashioned way, which made "William Henry" books so popular. A poem, on the "The Loss of Faith" is contributed by Hezekiah Butterworth. The leading article of the number is an editorial sketch of the life and work of Millet, the French painter, accompanied by several drawings from his pictures, including a portrait of the artist himself. "A Drive through Snow," "A Tale of Newsboy of the War," and "Some Californin Birds" are among the shorter stories and articles. The domestic departments of the magazine are well sustained, containing a large amount of original matter. The Cottage Hearth and the Journal one year for $2.00.

Political Paragraphs.

The enormous wealth of Jay Gould and W. H. Vanderbilt will impress the average mind when it realizes the fact, as stated by Senator Van Wyck, that Gould's wealth was greater than the assessed property real and personal of Kansas and Nebraska, and Vanderbilt could buy both and still have $100,000,000 left.

A gratifying example is furnished in Governor Gov. Buttars, who as president of the senate in appointing committees made politics a secondary matter and fitness for the place the first requisite. Fusion senators were chairmen of some of the most important committees, and a number of committees are constituted with a majority against the republicans. The contrast between the officers of the two houses shows the difference between a man and a partisan."—Hot Springs Independent.

Postmaster General Hatton has introduced the Chairman of the House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads a draft of a bill providing for the reduction of postage on second class matter, or newspapers mailed by publishers, from two cents to one cent per pound. It is provided in the bill that this rate shall not apply to the circulation of sample copies gratuitously, although the publisher may charge a year circulate sample copies to an amount to exceed in number the actual circulation of the paper at the date of publishing.

Representative Hampton is stirring up the legislative animals good deal. Two of the committees were formed before a place on the committees, but as he was known to be sharp and aggressive, and opposed by Republicans holding seats in violation of the Constitution, as Speaker Carlisle, himself, and several other leaders were doing, his request was granted. He then got one of the leaders of the committee to exchange places with him, but again the Republican speaker violated all rules of precedent and refused to grant the request.—[Chebeygan Journal.

People Pay for the Passes.

The people of Michigan made a big mistake last fall when they voted down the amendment relating to free and railroad passes for men of influence. Granting then that that fact that members receive favors from the railroads makes no difference with their votes upon matters wherein railroads are interested; but railroad passes are not apt to grant favors to men expecting favors in return) still it must be seen that the system is an evil which should be remedied at once. The members receive but a small pay that they can not afford to drop their business at home, and they feel that they must have a little part compensation for their services. Having passes in their pocket, they can run home cheaper, and can stay at Lansing, and pay way goes on all the same. This gives members to secure frequent leaves of absence, and gives rise to frequent and long adjournments, a day of which costs the people of the State nearly a thousand dollars just as though business was progressing.

The members should receive a fair pay, be the session long or short, and the most stringent provisions should be adopted against the use of railroad passes. Then if the legislature faded away any time it would be their own, and not at the expense of the people.—[Harbor Spring Inquirer.

The Traverse City Asylum.

The Board of Commissioners of the Northern Asylum for the Insane at Traverse City met at the Russell House, Detroit, at 10 o'clock last Tuesday, to open bids for putting in boilers and power boilers in the new building. All the members were in attendance. The boilers for heating will be two in number; each 26 feet 4 inches long and 8 feet internal diameter, constructed throughout of best Martin open hearth, homogeneous steel. "Black Diamond" or other approved steel will be used in their manufacture. The fire boxes of excellent are to be made of the best steel plate; all other sheets of best iron. Each sheet must be tested and stand 60,000 pounds per square strain and show a reduction of area not less than 50 per cent. Each boiler will have two furnaces in the shell, divided by a water space. There will also be two power boilers, each 6 ft. diameter and 16 ft. long, having a front smoke extension of 1 ft. 4 in. and a horizontal dome 6 ft. long and 3 ft. diameter, connected to the boiler with two 12 in. nozzles.

On Thursday the contract was awarded to the Lansing Iron & Engine Works at $6,850.

Health Without Medicine.

"The wonderful sanitary influence of Northwestern Michigan are becoming well known to all America and 'the rest of mankind.' No malaria, hay fever, neuralgia or brain weakness; no sick headache, dyspepsia or general debility affects the people. The brain and nerves are calmed and the muscles and vital organs braced exactly the reverse of what happens to the average residents of our large towns. The winters are long, but bring deep snows and a uniform temperature, so as to insure the highest degrees of bodily vigor. The summers are not oppressively warm, and the autumns are fascinating. The soil after being cleared, is easily worked and productive, a crop of 30 or 40 bushels of wheat per acre being quite common; and for raising berries and winter fruit, there is no better clime on earth. Water is plentiful and pure, and the lakes and streams are the homes of the choicest fish. Railroads now traverse the region, and during the summer season the prows of lordly steamers cut the glittering waters between all important points. It is no wonder that a magnificent growth has set in, and that southern Michigan is looking wistfully and emigrating actively, 'up north.'"—[Lansing Republican.

Historical Society.

Society gathered at the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Fox, and enjoyed the evening highly. Although very cold, there were a great many present. The following program was attentively listened to: Instrumental solo by Miss Cochran. Paper by R. W. Knox which was considered instructive. Al. T. Washburn, vocal solo (very fine). Select reading, F. A. Smith. Recitation, Mrs. Carlstein, and very nicely delivered. Instrumental duet, Mrs. O. D. Wood and Mrs. F. A. Smith. Intermission of ten minutes. Afterward Mrs. Carlstein delivered very ably a recitation on "Mrs. Mahoney on the Chinese Question." After dispensing with the regular order of business, the society adjourned, and all enjoyed an after "sociable." Altogether it made as pleasant a meeting as has been held this year.

On Thursday evening next the society will meet with Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Loveday, February 3d.

Donation Supper.

At the residence of James O'Brian, in Norwood township, occurred last Friday night, one of those pleasant occasions which go far toward making up the memorable events of our long winters. Rev. Mr. Van Anken, of the Congregational Church here, makes regular appointments for services in the Hilton school house, and to partly compensate him, a supper was provided by the ladies of that vicinity, and invitations generally extended to the people all the way from Charlevoix to Norwood, who attended in liberal numbers. Seventy-two tickets were sold, the excellent supper "well cared for," and the balance of the evening devoted to a social time generally. We understand that another similar entertainment is contemplated, and will be provided for in the near future.

Birthday Surprise.

On Friday evening last, at about 9 o'clock, as Miss Addie Peasley returned home from church, she was surprised to find about twenty of her friends there, waiting to receive her. The occasion was an enjoyable one. A bountiful repast was served, and all felt that "it was good to be there." The surprise was complete, and much credit is due to Mr. Weyborn and his friends for its success.

Extensive Fishing Business.

Arrangements are being made by S. H. Davis & Co., of Detroit, to engage extensively in fishing next summer, making their shipments from Charlevoix. It is said they will employ three large fish tugs, besides buying the catch of local fishermen, and will make arrangements with steamers from Detroit to touch here so as to make direct shipments to the east and south. They have already leased a lot of Greening & Geiken for an ice house (on the old planing mill site), and have made arrangements for boarding twenty tug men and fishermen who will arrive at the opening of navigation.

If this firm succeeds here, it is no doubt the beginning of a business which will give Charlevoix a national reputation, for if the catch is abundant, means of preserving will naturally be employed, and gradually become permanent features of the business.

Fred S. Kleiber has a farm 2½ miles from Cadillac, connected with that city by telephone; has a large dairy, and owns over $12,000 worth of blooded stock.

The house of John Winters, of Milton, was destroyed by fire last Friday night, with all household goods and 120 bushels of potatoes and 15 baskets of onions.

Here is an idea from the Cheboygan correspondent of the Petoskey Democrat, regarding game laws: Quite a number of deer were found the woods as it is becoming quite far from home out of the swamps. The best game law for this part of the country would be one which would make all counties shoulder the in the county pays a license of five dollars per month for the privilege of hunting deer. The money could be added to the poor fund of the county.

"Some idea of the tremendous power of our fire alarm may be gathered from the following truthful incidents in connection with the Fourth ward hose-less fire last Tuesday night. Mr. Austin, the watchful clerk at the Occidental, while waiting the arrival of the belated night train from the north, was treating his shins by the stove fire. Hearing the first strokes of the alarm, he thought the noise was caused by the scratching of a tall in his head upon the stove-funder. Will Snyder, sweeping at Harwood's house one block away, dreamed he was out sleighriding with the girls while the triangle sweetly tinkled."—[Petoskey Record.

A precious carpet has been destroyed in San Francisco. It had covered the floor of one of the rooms in the Mint, and had been used for five years. The dust of the precious metals used in the coinage had during that period daily fallen upon it, and when it was taken up the authorities had it cut in small pieces and burned in pans. The ashes were subjected to the process employed with mining dust, and they realized $2,500. Thus the carpet, after years of wear, was more precious than when it was new.

Not join the giddy dancers' whirl,
I pray you do not launch, my girl,

To my old age to watch your glow—

And though full well I know I seem Quite out of place in scenes like this,
You can't begrime how much it bliss
Revives me once to sit and dream,
As vont 'tis to me a-sitting by,
How I, too, dwelt in Arcady.

For, sweetheart, in your merry eyes
A vanished time I see both lend shine,
And with the music blithely beat
Your merry mother's heart of old,
And over a long gap of years
My buried heart beat under—back.

And as with fear-blinded eyes I cast
On you awe I learn my swain-ing glance—
I blame your mother and forbear
Just—even as then that maid I set,
Ten years ago—to-day, this time
When I, too, dwelt in Arcady.

And on the maid's tangling notes
I seem to hear old voices ring—
That have been in bed, oh! many a spring,
And re-pelabo—the family Boaz
Th' sweetest a melody
I used to hear in early.

And yonder youth—may, do not blush;
The be—his father ere again;
And lucky you! I see not plain
When at his age what I was? Ihush?
He's smitten! th-ware! Yes, I see—
I, too, was dwelt in Arcady.

HERR MUNSON'S VIOLIN.

CA SEMA E. SEE.

CHAPTER I.

The last sweet strains of a violin floated out upon the still, frosty air—and, solemn words:

It was midnight. Crowds of people were assembled in the little gothic church of Rottingen, to watch the death of the old year and the birth of the new. The bells tolled; and as the last echo reverberated and died on the air the faint, sweet melody of the violin again was heard, like the wailings of a departing soul.

The sad strains of the violin had scarcely died away when the tinkling of an asthan harp was heard to the passing in tones accompanied by a sweet, dulcet voice.

The figure of a man approached the crowd and stood for a moment as though paralyzed. How familiar the strains. What fond memories were stirred in the heart of the bronzed, bearded stranger, occasioned by the musicianess musician.

"A true voice, that!" exclaimed one of the watchers, passing a moment, and again he sang, "and, by my faith, it is a master hand now sweeps the lyre. But, my friend, only some common strolling musicians a German three and his pretty and clever little Fraulein. But is all!" and the listener turned away, leaving the stranger evidently awaiting a repetition of the heavenly music and rapturous voice of the little child-appreciated performer and her lyre.

At length another song came forth, the clear old German words the loved and native air of the Fatherland.

Low notes of tender pathos fell on his strained senses as sweet, heart-rending voice and, wanting to hear no more, he abruptly left the church and sprang into a sleigh at a time of the crowd, dispatched station, and burst without ceremony into a dilapidated but comfortable apartment, where dwelt the subject of our story.

Herr Munson half reclined on a low settee, his head drooped wearily upon the to his almost human friend who had supported between his knee and chin, and, pressing his pleased fingers over the strings, he was about to reproduce the last measures of the dearly loved and familiar air, when the child's song, when the stranger appeared upon the threshold.

He gazed entranced.

In a few chime, dreamily gazing into the golden mists of the future, was the bowed head of the child as her listened. Deep blue eyes, large and luminous, rippling golden hair, sweeping in shimmering waves over her shoulders, with woven workers, and lovingly clustering around the low, pure brow of the beautiful, fair-haired young dreamer, cheeks as delicately tinted as the petals of delicately rose-bud, a sweet, sensitive mouth, incapable of anything akin to deceit, a native trustfulness and loftiness out of guile. Such was Gretchen Grothen, Munson, the fair lily of Pavarin the child-idolized quarry of a bold debonr fathers knight.

Not the least sign or recognition crossed the startled face of the woman during last as he arose to welcome this infernal guest. He bade him welcome, husband heard the only musical treat, and with unfeigned pleasure listened to the music of his country, offered a pipe of long dimensions together with a well-filled tobacco pouch to the stranger.

It was a thing rare the Herr became totally oblivious to all present surroundings and conversations, in the discussing events in the faraway land in Essex, of Hessia, of the home of the stranger and whatever which he found the stranger a welcomed and an equally welcomed guest, he himself or his fellow-townsmen.

The stranger, in the latter, in the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

"Parlor Lines."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In your issue of Dec. 25 there is an extract from Joseph Cook's lecture on "Lawlessness", regarding the drawing of parlor lines against women who belong to the families of liquor sellers. Now we all know that Joseph Cook's treatment of the temperance question is usually considered reasonable and just, but, notwithstanding, we beg leave to differ with him very materially regarding his "parlor lines." We would ask his authority for closing the doors of society against a wife because of some wrong her husband may do, or for shutting outside the daughter or mother of a man who is dealing in poison? Mr. Cook would have us suppose that the wife of every liquor seller is a soul and body partner in her husband's miserable business, which supposition is known by all sober-minded, observing people to be untrue. That there are wives who uphold and aid their husbands in the selling of liquor, is too sadly true, but it is just as true that there are many who would shed tears of joy could they persuade their husbands to forsake their liquor selling and give themselves to some honest toil, even though it only brought nickles instead of the ill gotten dollars. Many a saw-mill keeper's wife would prefer to step upon a bare floor provided by honest toil, rather than rest her feet upon Brussels tapestry purchased with money wrung from the hearts and homes of other wives. Many a rum seller's wife is pure and Christian, and her prayers approximate just as near the throne of mercy as do those of other wives who are particularly careful about "parlor lines." And yet Mr. Cook is "not unwilling" that the lines be drawn against such as these. That there is a "right hand and a left," we admit, but we will not admit, that Joseph Cook, the ladies of Cleveland, or any other person, has a Christian right, or any other right, to say that the lines of society shall be drawn against "every woman belonging to the family of a liquor-seller." If a liquor seller has a wife who is not in sympathy with his business, all the more does she need that help and encouragement which comes from communing with those who are striving to overthrow the wrong and bind up the right. Sue — a sister woman and bless difficulties which you and I know nothing of. Baby faces may nestle upon her bosom, and her scalding tears drop upon their curly heads as she looks out into their dark future, with temptations at their very door. Draw the parlor lines against such if you can, but don't forget that in so doing you may draw the lines of a higher mansion against yourself.

Beatrice, Neb. MRS. A. HARRY.

Say, ma, I seen a nigger pie seven eggs in his mouth all at once," said Johnny Cuatle, as he came in from his supper. "Hump, that's nothing; your father put that butcher shop and a horse and wagon into his," tartly replied Mrs. Cuatle. Whiskey was the ruination of the old man.

Simplifying the Pharmacy Bill.

As soon as the present session of the Legislature settled down to business, the draft of the pharmacy bill adopted at the last meeting of the Michigan State Pharmaceutical Association was presented to several leading legislators, who examined the measure carefully and found several constitutional objections to its enactment, as the statute provides that no bill shall contain more than one main provision, whereas the measure under consideration was proposed to regulate the practice of pharmacy, prohibit adulterations, and systematize the sale of poisons. As it was evident that the bill could not be made operative without certain important changes, it was thought best to call a meeting of the legislative committee, which was accordingly done. The committee is composed of Messrs. Geo. McDonald, of Kalamazoo; H. J. Brown, of Ann Arbor; and F. M. Alsdorf, of Lansing; and besides these gentlemen there were present at the conference President Geo. W. Crouter, of Charlevoix; ex President Frank Wells, of Lansing; Secretary Jacob Jessen, of Muskegon; and Geo. Davis, of Lansing. The bill was thoroughly discussed and the necessities of the occasion set forth. The poison and adulteration clauses were omitted, the preamble was cut off, and other useless provisions stricken out, the whole reducing the bill to fully half its former length. A clause was added prescribing the court of jurisdiction, and the manner of procedure in cases of violation, the penalties being made in accordance with the statutes. The bill was introduced in the House by Representative Collins, and has already passed second reading. It will be introduced in the Senate by Senator Hueston, who will vigorously champion it in that body. Altogether the prospects for the early enactment of the measure are excellent.—[Tradesman.

Operations of the New Pharmacy Bill.

Big Rapids, Jan. 26, 1885.

To the Editor of the Tradesman:

DEAR SIR, I have been a clerk in a retail drug store for six years, and expect to become a dealer myself within the next year or two. In case the new pharmacy bill passes at the present session of the legislature, what must I do to be qualified? Will I be compelled to pass an examination? Please answer through the Tradesman, for the benefit of several other drug clerks who would like a little light on this subject. Yours, etc., PHARMACIST.

By the terms of the new bill which will undoubtedly be a law before many more months have elapsed every person who has been engaged in the retail drug business, either as dealer or clerk, for two years, may apply for registration within three months after the passage of the act and become a "registered pharmacist." Those who fail to apply for registration will be compelled to pass an examination before a state board of pharmacy, composed of five members, who will hold examinations at designated points four times a year. The State Pharmaceutical Association will see that every druggist in the state is properly notified as soon as the bill becomes a law.

Did you ever stop to think what a tireless letter writer a good local paper is? Day after day, week after week, reaching into year after year, it goes on telling of the marriages, births, deaths, and the coming and the going of the people of the town, the business success or failure, accidents, crops, improvements, meetings, revivals, in fact events of all kinds. All a spirit that comes to the hopper of a good local paper. Why if you were to undertake to write a letter each week to your absent friend and tell half the news that your local paper gives you would soon give up in despair. The supposed pleasure becomes tiresome, the letter shorter, further apart, and finally quit. Why the difference? Because with the newspaper it is business. People in a live town recognize this and take pleasure in giving the editor the news items you would never learn of. If you want an absent friend to have all the happenings of your town, you can give him all of interest each week by sending the Journal for $1.50.

Democrats Banqueting.

At the close of the session of the State Central Committee in the parlors of the Lansing House on Wednesday evening, Mr. I. M. Weston of Grand Rapids invited the members and several other prominent Democrats to an elegant banquet in the dining room. Either about 30 gentlemen repaired, and the feasting began. Letters of regret from Don M. Dickinson, Judge Champlin, O. M. Barnes and Edward Kanter, were read. Representative Ford of Grand Rapids acted as toastmaster with admirable grace and dignity. The toast of "The State Central Committee" was responded to by H. F. Pennington of Charlotte; "Our Gallant Leaders" by John J. Enright of Detroit; "The Men Who Have Stood by us Through Thick and Thin; Through Adversity and Defeat," by Representative Black of Tuscola; "The Democratic Press" by A. J. Sinclespeare of Kalamazoo; "Ingham County, the Banner County of the State" by Col. Geo. P. Sanford of Lansing; "The Legislature of Michigan" by Representative Case of Detroit; "The Democratic Bar of Michigan" by O. W. Powers of Kalamazoo; "How Tarsney Horizontally wiped out the Republican Majority" by Mayor Weadock of Bay City. Mr. Fletcher then proposed the health of Mr. Weston, which was drank with enthusiasm. Mr. Weston made a happy response, and the banquet ended by drinking the health of Don M. Dickinson, which was proposed by Mr. Weston.—[Lansing Journal.

A Wise Suggestion.

It having been broadly hinted a short time since that a movement was on foot to give Hon. A. P. Swineford the custom house at Marquette, that gentleman sat down upon the rumor at once by emphatically stating in his own paper that he would not accept if it even if tendered to him. He further said that he was looking for no appointment at least none in the U. S. We believe him. Although clearly entitled to the best gifts at the disposal of the party, on account of his long and distinguished services, and splendid abilities, he yet showed a rare self abnegation in these days of place hunting, by promptly stepping aside and refusing to look for any reward. While admiring this exhibition of unselfishness on the part of Mr. Swineford, his friends were by no means content to let the matter drop there, and after deliberation, they finally decided to push for his appointment as United States Marshal. We "second the motion," heartily, and trust that Mr. Swineford will keep his seat pending the call for the ayes and nays. Although unable to swear that the office is any "great shakes" after all, yet we shall vote in the affirmative on general principles. Mr. Swineford is entitled to substantial recognition for his unfaltering adhesion to the minority party in the upper peninsula, and he can justly claim the support of all classes as well, on the score of long years of faithful labor in behalf of the material and vital interests of this particular division of the State. [Chippewa Democrat.

What Protection Is.

"Protection" is taxation. If the protective tariff did not increase the price of merchandize, it would afford no protection." It is taxation of Americans. Not Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Germans but our own people. We pay the extra price for the "protected" articles we consume. Can a country's prosperity be increased by taxation?" [Boston Herald.

"An Over Production."

Under the above caption the Grand Traverse Herald discusses the demise of certain local newspapers, and the precautions existence and possible early suspension of others. Over production is assigned as a cause for much of the trouble of country newspapers in northern Michigan. We will suggest a cause of the over production. Usually a man who undertakes to publish a neutral local newspaper is looked upon by his moral brethren and others as lacking something in his mental make-up. He is accounted of little value to the craft, to his town or to anyone, until he sticks out wildly as a party organ. The officials who have the distribution of public work give force to this sentiment by insisting that the papers must support the administration or be deprived of the work by competition. Papers are frequently started as party organs, and not to comply any demand for news. And when the parties are nearly equally divided, each must have an organ, though the actual business is not enough to support one decently. Party zeal, reinforced by careful management and many self denials, frequently keep these papers running when the outlay is greater than the income. In some cases, less, where one paper has had the field alone, and has just begun to be well supported, their arrogance and bitter partisan assaults have compelled the starting of opposition papers, though the business of the town would not really warrant it.

Another mistake in the attempt, stimulated by the cheapness of "got out inside," to compete with city weeklies. When such weeklies as the Detroit Free Press and the Post, and hundreds of others from all over the country, can be bought for one dollar a year, giving four or five times the amount of state and general home and foreign news, miscellany, stories, etc., the home paper can pass its hot-cakes and when nearly every family takes one or more of these great weeklies anyway, it is folly for the country paper to make time to compete.

If the country paper will confine itself to giving all the home news, and not assault the political or personal opinions of the editor, we imagine its success will be greater, and in many villages competition will be averted.

It is not many years since $2 000 a year was the standard price of weekly papers. With increased manufacturing the city publisher can now produce a much better paper on half the money, and even the country publisher who necessarily is taxed for the same items as the city publisher cannot afford to sell his paper for $2 00 a year. Times cannot improve as long as we continue to produce too much. The prescription seems plain.

Finally, if you will examine any weekly paper you receive, you will find a page or more of boiler plate matter, which could be purchased for a trifle by the publisher, and which would be just as interesting to the reader as the home matter now published.

Political Partnerships.

It is now stated that Wisconsin Democrats in the United States Senate are in favor of changing Senator Vilas for Colonel Bragg.

A young lady walking out for a stroll on Saturday, at Cedar Rapids, was accosted by a man who asked her if she was a Democrat. She replied that she was not, and he then said he was glad of it, as he was a Democrat himself, and he hated to walk with one.

There are services this week in the Congregational Church, and next week in the M. E. Church. Prayer meeting night.

There will be no services at the Congregational Church next Sunday on account of the union services in the M. E. Church.

Wm. G. W. Jefferies' tools for his new market arrived at Petoskey, one car was broken, which will cause a little delay in the completion of the building.

Assaults by young bloods upon Indians are becoming altogether too frequent. There are some half dozen young fellows in town who ought to see their names in the police court record.

The audiences at the recent temperance services show that the new Congregational Church will comfortably seat 450 people. By actual count last Sunday evening there were 320 present, and there were seats for over 40 more.

A letter to Wm. B. Taylor from his son says that H. M. Lund of Osceola has 3,000 acres of land in the new gold fields of Minnesota, which show very rich deposits of ore, and that a large colony will go there from Osceola in the spring.

A sample of native sorghum syrup left at this office by Jos. G. Reed, shows that it can be made a successful product of this region. Mr. Reed says it can be made much easier and cheaper than maple syrup, and some people like it as well.

The Detroit Free Press issued last Sunday an extra state edition, eight pages, nearly all reading matter, for three cents per copy. The Free Press is always at the front in the collection and publication of news, and its great size enables it to cover the field well.

Frozen feet often itch terribly for years after being frost bitten. This can be cured by thoroughly rubbing in alcohol, for about ten days; rub well in until the foot is dry, and then hold the foot as close to the fire as can be borne, for a minute or more.

—Scientific American.

Last Friday evening about twenty couple (part of them from Charlevoix) assembled at the residence of F. J. Smith in Hayes, and enjoyed a social dance till nearly morning. The evening was bright and pleasant, and the occasion was altogether delightful to those in attendance.

A. D. Bradbeer is making some fine photographic views of Charlevoix, showing our winter scenery at its best. There are views of the icehouses from the bluff, views of the bluff from the end of the pier, birds-eye views of the town from different points, and in fact all the principal buildings and points of interest are being photographed. He will have a fine stock for next summer's trade.

Jim Wassegijick, an Indian, was brutally assaulted last Saturday evening by two roughs, who destroyed his bundle of groceries and went through his pockets for money, leaving him in bad shape. On Monday warrants were issued for the arrest of Austin Cook and Wm. Smith, but Cook has skipped. The trial is set for next Saturday at 2 o'clock, before Justice McLeod, and Smith is out on bail.

A writer in the East Jordan Enterprise pays a deserved compliment to our jail. No man who finds himself confined therein can say "when the sun goes down I go free," but the officer in charge can turn the bolts and lie down with the consciousness that when morning comes he will find his prisoner where he left him. What are jails for if not to restrain and punish criminals? If you fear this "cooped up like," so confine yourself that incarceration therein will not become necessary.

"The local paper," says Whitelaw Reid, "is the best paper in the world. All the city papers cannot supply the place of the home paper. No other contains the marriages and deaths, to say nothing of divorces and births. No other paper gives the time of the next ball, prudent political meeting, or other public bee, the 'call of honor' for the public schools, or other discussion of the affairs of the town and vicinity, or gives in detail the local news, which can be obtained from no other source. Everybody reads it, and this is why the local paper is the best read in the world, and the best advertising medium for its circulation extant."

An inch space in the newspaper is worth a thousand miles of advertising on a board fence. It is correct for the farmers these cold days to gather around the warm fires and read everything in a newspaper, and if there were signs as large as a barn door right in the middle of the road which they traveled home, they would go around them and never give them a parting glance.

All attorneys having cases in the next term of court are requested to furnish to the county clerk their notices of issue at least ten days before first day of term. By the action of the board of supervisors in letting the county printing to a printer away from the county seat, it is absolutely impossible for the clerk to make his copy for the calendars, furnish it to the printers, and get the work back in the time allowed by law. Please bear this in mind.

There will be a meeting of the northern district lodge of good templars in this village, on Feb. 11 and 12. The lodge is composed of delegates from the subordinate lodges in the counties of Manistee, Benzie, Grand Traverse, Kalkaska, Antrim, and Charlevoix. We understand that arrangements have been made for holding an open lodge on the evening of the first day, at which time some stirring addresses may be expected.

The Temperance Meetings.

Dr. Henry A. Reynolds arrived last Friday, and put in three nights of the most effective temperance work ever done in Charlevoix.

The Congregational church was well filled every night, and the doctor went to work in his usual practical way, wasting no time in flowery, polished oratory. He told the people simple, indisputable facts; he told them where they erred, and advised them what to do about it.

At the close of the meetings he had secured over 300 signatures to the pledges, and there is reason to believe the results will be more permanent than anything ever before attempted here.

During his short stay the doctor made many friends, and if he should ever return he may be sure of a cordial welcome.

English Synonyms.

The copiousness of the English tongue, as well as the efficacy of its using the ability to use its immense vocabulary correctly, is well exhibited in so following array of synonyms: A lot, which, if not new, is yet a capital illustration of the point we are endeavoring to make: Of colors, we can characterize so many only as dyes. It is no wonder that we are perplexed, even the wariest of us. A little girl was looking at the picture of a number of ships, when she exclaimed: "See what a flock of ships!" We corrected her by saying that a flock of sheep is called a fleet, and that a fleet of sheep is called a flock. And here we would add, for the benefit of the foreigner who is mastering the intricacies of our language in respect to nouns of multitude, that a flock of geese is called a skein, that a bevy of wolves is called a pack, and that a pack of thieves is called a gang, and that a gang of angels is called a host, and a host of porpoises is called a shoal, and a shoal of herrings is called a berth, and a herd of cattle or deer is called a drove, and a drove of asses is called a pace, and a pace of partridges is called a covert, and a covert of beauties is called a galaxy, and a galaxy of ruffians is called a horde, and a horde of rascals is called a band, and a band of monkeys is called a barrel, and a barrel of oxen is called a drove, and a drove of blackguards is called a mob, and a mob of whales is called a school, and a school of worshippers is called a congregation, and a congregation of engineers is called a corps, and a corps of robbers is called a band, and a band of beasts is called a swarm, and a swarm of people is called a crowd, and a crowd of gentlemen is called the elite, and the elite of the city's thieves and rascals is called the roughs.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Keystone of a Great Tower Laid.

Three hundred people, with upturned faces and staring eyes watched the monster marble keystone of the arch of the big tower of the Public Buildings at Philadelphia as it swung in air. A slight board railing kept the crowd from coming under the stone. Sender two steel cables, looking hardly strong enough to bear a workman's weight, held the mass. A tall mason, with polished whiskers, made the signal to "shoot away," and a black giant arm stretched out from above the marble top, 190 feet in the air, gathered in the slender cords. The frame of a workman, seeming as though viewed from the large end of a telescope, walked out upon the giant's arm and looked down. Beneath the stone a mason nonchalantly chipped away with hammer and chisel at a notice of the day. The giant's arm made a sweep and dropped over the openings which the six tons of marble were to fasten. From the courtyard below the immense block looked as though two men could lift it. Across Penn Square the lights and windows of the Broad Street Station glowed like the flame of two huge torches on the keystone was in place.

The heaviest piece in the tower is the coveted piece in the entire building, the lower front of the tower. It weighs 54 tons, and is called the Lawrence. "I have to have all the stonework passed by the end of the present month," said the engineer of the work. "And here it is the middle of January. Not much stonework can be done in winter, but bricklaying, and I can put in 1,000 bricks a day. From this time forward I will work on the tower, and I can put in 1,000 bricks, bricks, bricks, and the ground will be Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company."—Philadelphia Record.

Puzzle It Out for Pick.

Where and How We Remember.

If, now, we take models of our brains, and on the first mark out the location of the various areas connected with the various sensory organs as determined in the anatomical connection of the white nerve-threads on the cerebral mass, and mark out the location of the various areas which physiologists have shown to govern various sensory organs in the third mass and the various areas whose disease produces disturbance of action in the various sensory organs, and loss of memory of perceptions in those organs; and on the fourth mark out the various areas which wither atrophy of disease of the various sensory organs—we shall find that upon all four traces the areas belonging to any one organ coincide. We may therefore conclude that each class of sensations and each class of memories has its own definite area of the great matter convolutions of the brain. Memories of objects seen are located in the posterior part in the occipital region. Memories of sounds heard are located in the lower lateral part in the temporal region. Memories of motions in the limbs, and of motions in those limbs, are located side by side in the central lateral region. Memories of speech are located in the frontal region. It is therefore a mistake to speak of memory as a single faculty of the mind. It is really an association of distinct memories which we possess, each kind of memory being as different from the others both in its nature and in its location as are the different organs of sense through which the original perception came.

A Blushing Chinese Bride.

There was great commotion in the heart of Chinatown yesterday afternoon. A wedding in high life was on the tapis, and a crowd of 400 or 500 Celestials surrounded the home of the bride, in an endeavor to catch a glimpse of the lady as she went to meet the happy man. When the girl started down the narrow stairs, in charge of an old woman, the curious heathens made a rush for the door-way, and when she appeared upon the sidewalk, with her blushing face hid behind a fan, the excitement became so intense that the services of the police were necessary to clear a way for the carriage. Every face in the surging crowd was adorned with a grotesque grin, and a chorus of "Ahs" and "Ohs" greeted the rare and radiant maiden as she was about to cause a upon the unfortunate sex of mankind.

The bride's dress was of pale blue brocade, trimmed with gauze and tinsel, while the pantaloons were of silk full width of yellow satin. Her hair was dressed a la Hong Kong, there being no fancy of any description. Her charming little feet were hid hidden in a benevolent pair of silk shoppers with the toes blocked off. This vision of loveliness was carefully placed in a closed carriage and driven to the apartments of the bridegroom, who was waiting to greet and to compliment his relatives and friends that he hoped for him.

There the scenes enacted on Morrison street were repeated as the little Lawrence. "I have to have all the stonework passed by the end of the present month," said the engineer of the work. "And here it is the middle of January. Not much stonework can be done in winter, but bricklaying, and I can put in 1,000 bricks a day. From this time forward I will work on the tower, and I can put in 1,000 bricks, bricks, bricks, and the ground will be Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company."—Philadelphia Record.

Baked and Broiled Oysters.

In answer to a correspondent, the New York Times publishes the following recipes, showing the use of the oyster in cookery:

Bake oysters. Grate some dry cold bread and put a layer in the bottom of a dish; season with salt, white pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Drain the oysters and lay a row on the bread crumbs; then a little more bread crumbs, a few bits of butter, and careful not to press them. Now add some more bread crumbs and then the rest of the oysters, seasoning as before. Then put them in their own liquor with a very little water, and the top of each oyster must be covered with bread crumbs. Arrange a few more bits of butter on the top, and bake in a quick oven. Serve in the dish in which they are baked. Broil oysters. Select large oysters, season with salt and pepper, and dip each one in melted butter. Have a clear fire and a well-greased gridiron, and broil the oysters over a quick fire. Serve on a hot dish with a little melted butter poured over them.

The Rights of Inebriates.

A Peekskill man was awarded $2,500 for damages to his person, received by falling in a hole in the street. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, where it was argued the man was drunk when injured. In his decision Chief Justice Church said: "I don't think a man is guilty of contributory negligence if he gets drunk and falls into a hole. A man wants a good street to walk in if he does get drunk." Public sentiment will uphold this decision. The Chief Justice might have gone still further, and said that a man never needs a good street so much as when he is drunk. When he is sober he may avoid pit-falls, holes, and excavations—although he does not always succeed in doing so—but when "under the influence" he is not responsible for the local condition of the thoroughfares. He has enough to do to manage the "sanguine" part of this affair without turning himself into an object lesson to illustrate the carelessness or criminal negligence of those official persons whose business it is to see that the streets are kept in proper condition. In other words, Jemison men have rights which street commissioners are bound to respect.—N. Y. Com. Adv.

An Abyssinian Belle.

With the large majority of the native females in Turkey, the prevailing tint is yellow. Nine out of ten of them are pigeon-toed and all the blondes have freckles. They never wither and dry up in growing old, as do the natives in the north and west, but fatten and grow ugly, developing ridges where there ought to be hollows, growing at the edges and settling in height, until at early womanhood they have no more shape or figure than a Hubbard squash.

If I were to have my choice of the whole invoice, I should take an Abyssinian brunette. They are slender and tall and slender and black as pipe stems of spoules. The features are clearcut and regular, the eyes liquid and the lips red and full. The hair is black and curling, but somewhat coarse in fiber. They dress in pure white, and the black face and red lips against the white setting of the harmous give an effect that is as entertaining as a picture.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A controversy as to why women button their coatles from right to left, and men from left to right, has led to an elaborate display of learning and wit. One writer says that men have continued from fort to tight since the earliest Assyrian dynasties. Another asserts that the mode of buttoning distinguishes the Mussulman and the Hebrew in Italy, while a third says that the sword need not go so far as India for an illustration, as the women of America are recognizable by the male system of buttoning from left to right. The ladies of New Orleans, who held to the other fashion to a recent period, did so because of the French colonization of Louisiana. A lady insists that her sex button from right to left because the dressmakers so lay their dresses, and denies that man has any right to draw invidious inferences when a window and a conscientious female tights the notes that the placing of the tight thumb over the left is positive proof of a rising maid.

The Mexican government seems to be doing well. Spain in the meanly and lawlessness of its days, and its treasury is empty. Accordingly it has increased the customs duties from 15 per cent. to 25 per cent. According to the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury, imported iron to the value of $2,000,000 has been admitted free. Iron is used in building houses, wearing apparel, and many kindred lines, cheaper goods, as we understand it, than the same goods are made in Mexico, so the increase of duty on iron will fall on the whole of a people who must be stamped, and at last overwhelmed by the armies turned loose by Jay Gould.

Many Hindoo princes possess large wealth, and most of them are educated in England from their youth, and it is not uncommon to find one of them a full fledged member of the English bar. Many of the estates were sequestrated during the mutiny, and have since been administered by the British courts. Some of the Hindoo princes have been deposed for misgovernment, and others have been allowed to succeed to the throne on the payment of large sums of money. The Nizam of Hyderabad is said to be the richest of the princes, and his wealth is estimated at $100,000,000. The Gaekwar of Baroda is also very rich, and has a revenue of $7,000,000 a year. The Maharajah of Travancore has a revenue of $2,000,000, and the Maharajah of Mysore has a revenue of $1,500,000. The Maharajah of Cashmere has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Puttiala has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Jeypore has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Scindia has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Holkar has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Gwalior has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Kolapore has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Baroda has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Indore has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Gwalior has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Kolapore has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Baroda has a revenue of $1,000,000. The Maharajah of Indore has a revenue of $1,000,000, and the Maharajah of Gwalior has a revenue of $1,000,000.

Letter from Florida.

PORT ORANGE, FLA., Feb. 1, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—Having promised to write you, I will begin with the principal events in our travels to this land of flowers and oranges.

We left Petoskey on the morning of Jan. 21st, and arrived at Cincinnati the morning following. At the latter place we were delayed a couple of hours by the lateness of trains. The thermometer stood at 18° below zero the morning of our arrival, and we were told it had been much colder several times during the winter.

We were soon rolling over the road again, en route for Chattanooga via the Cincinnati Southern R. R. On leaving the Ohio river, we find the country very hilly, and the road as a consequence very crooked. This continues until we reach what is known as the blue-grass region of Kentucky. This is said to be the most fertile portion of the state, and the planters give most of their attention to the raising of stock and tobacco.

At two o'clock we crossed High Bridge, over the Kentucky river. This bridge, I am told, is the highest in the United States, being two hundred and seventy eight feet above the water. On the route between Covington and Chattanooga we passed through twenty seven tunnels, the longest (King's mountain) being a little over one mile in length.

At 4 p. m. we were on the Cumberland mountains, seventeen hundred feet above Cincinnati. Here we saw the last snow.

We arrived in Chattanooga in the evening, consequently could not see as much of the place as we could wish. Still, I recognized many old land marks, such as earthworks on the hills, thrown up during the war, which have not been entirely obliterated. Old Lookout frowns down upon us in the distance, and looks just as it did in the days of '63-4. It costs the visitor twenty five cents now to visit the summit, but I can well remember the time when it cost many a poor fellow his life to visit the same place. Those times are gone, I hope never to return, —but I must not step here to moralize.

The next morning finds us at Macon, where we stop to refresh the inner man. After a short twenty minutes we are whirling over the road again, but not very fast, owing to its bad condition. Southern Georgia, as well as most portions of Florida, are low, flat pine plains, good for nothing except for the manufacture of rosin and turpentine, which industry is quite extensively carried on. The pine from which it is manufactured resembles somewhat our Norway pine, except that the leaves are from eight to ten inches in length. The labor is performed by darkeys, of which the population of Georgia is mostly composed.

We arrived at Jesup in the evening, too late to take the train for Jacksonville, consequently were detained eight hours, and did not reach Jacksonville until the next morning, too late to take the up-river boat. Here we are forced to remain until the next evening (Sunday) before we can get a boat for Volusia, on the St. Johns river. We arrived at Volusia the next morning. Here I met with a little adventure of my own, but as it might not interest your readers, I will not write it here.

We reached Daytonia Monday evening, tired out, after a forty-mile ride across the country, most of the way over barren plains covered with water which came nearly to the hubs of the stage. Occasionally we would come to a rise of ground, which was taken advantage of by some cracker who had cleared off the pine and started an orange grove. And, by the way, it is worth a journey here to see an orange grove in full bearing, the rich golden fruit in contrast with the dark green leaves of the trees forming a picture of which you can have no idea by seeing the same painted on canvas. I think it is the most beautiful sight I ever saw. As we neared the Halifax river we came to what is known as the hammock lands, which for fertility of soil cannot be surpassed by any in the state, and I doubt whether any better can be found in any state. The soil is a dark sandy loam. Many orange groves are being planted on these lands, and those in bearing for fineness of flavor are equal to the famous Dummetgren, which brings such a big price in the New York market.

Next morning we take sail boat, and after a ride of six miles down the Halifax arrive at our destination (Port Orange). Here we find Mr. Carpenter and family, enjoying the best of health and domiciled in a palatial residence (but I don't propose to give him a free ad., so will not describe it). Later in the day we found him out on the hammock, with his sleeves rolled up and hat off, preparing his ground to set out his trees, and looking like a veritable cracker,—in fact he is as much one as though he had lived here for twenty years.

The Halifax river, on the east coast of south Florida, is an arm of the sea, one and one-half miles wide and twenty-five miles long, extending parallel to the ocean and separated from it by a narrow strip of land called the Halifax peninsula, one-half mile to three miles in width. The river here seems more like a lake, and is dotted here and there with small, low, mangrove islands. The air is soft and balmy as in May at home, and in the distance we hear the ceaseless roar of the ocean. The waters abound with fish, and from where I am writing I can see the porpoises at play. The reefs are covered with oysters, and so plenty that I could load a skiff (such a one as we have at home) in half an hour. So you will see that it is not necessary to have our soup as thin as they do at some of our church socials. Vegetables of all kinds can be raised in abundance. The gardens here are looking splendid, while a few short hours will bring us back home where our gardens are covered with two feet of snow. Mr. Carpenter and myself, on our way home from the hammock last night, pick a sack full of ripe to untoes. Oranges can be had, as many as you can carry away, by picking them up; and such oranges! none of your spongy mongrels, but oranges so full of juice that a good large one will furnish a good drink,—in fact I use one when I am thirsty, instead of using the water here, which is impregnated with sulphur.

I think I shall remain here about six weeks, as it will take that time to prepare my hammock and set out my trees. M. J. S.

The Titusville, Fla., Star, of Jan. 29, contains the following: Florida strawberries are in season at Brooksville, Hernando county, and are selling at $4 per quart. That must sound strange to the frozen and snowed up citizens of the North wading through snow three feet deep and the thermometer twenty degrees below zero. Come South, come to Florida, if you want to keep cool in the summer and warm in the winter and eat oranges, strawberries, lettuce and green peas all the year round.

The following from the Key West (Fla) Democrat, would indicate that business has a healthier tone in the South: The factories, with one or two exceptions, have all opened with large forces. The cigar industry appears to be improving. Many new factories recently started, and a number of gentlemen are now in town with the intention of embarking in this industry.

The Boyne City Statesman is threatening to climb the golden stairs if merchants don't support the paper better. Don't do that Phil Con. Your paper down to four pages, of say fourteens, print it all at home, cut off dead beats of all kinds, and hence up a little, and tell the fellows who wont advertise to go to hades (Cheboygan Democrat Traveling men report prospects for spring as improving. Things certainly look more promising in this region than they did thirty days ago.

WESTERN.

A dispatch from Anoka, Indian Territory, gives meager particulars of a bloody affray in which two men were slain: "Adams was held at the house of Jim Bounds, in the chickasaw Nation, by a "posse" named Buck Smith. During the progress of the dance several white men arrived on horseback, coolly shot their horses, and entered the house without an invitation, and they were treated indifferently. Presently one of the strangers drew a pistol into the ceiling. This was the signal for a general fusillade, one of the guests, named Gordon, opened on the leader of the intruding gang and killed him. Gordon was then relieved a bullet in his heart. The fight were eating, shed and the battle-ground, two hundred shots were fired. The women ran screaming from the room out into the woods. After five minutes' continual firing two of the strangers rushed out, mounted their horses, and escaped. When light were brought two of the strangers were found dead on the floor, covered with blood and gore. Clearly by three dead guests, including Gordon, while three Smith and one other guest were found dying."

WASHINGTON.

The Gould influence is said to be the strongest of all outside influences which approach Washington. The entire strength of the great railway system is concentrated about the Senate, and there Gould seems to be having his own way as usual. He has secured a majority of the Post-office Committee until it has agreed upon a bill which is practically a surrender of the interests of the Government to the Union Pacific controversy. Mr. Gould is not in the habit of employing professional lobbyists. He never wastes money in giving dinners. He supposes are accomplished by securing the best information. The damage is supposed to have been caused by electric light wires.

Secretary Manning sent to the House, the other day, an urgent letter requesting an appropriation of $50,000 to provide for the storage and transportation of silver coin. In his letter Mr. Metcalfe mentions that the continuance of the independent Treasury for the current year, $50,000, is exhausted, and a deficiency appropriation of $50,000 will be necessary. A good deal of this money has been used to pay for carting silver from one place to another. That sum is insignificant compared with the demands upon it. The praise on coinage may be used to pay for the transportation of coin from a mint to the Treasury or a Sub-Treasury, but not for transportation from one Sub-Treasury to another, or from a Sub-Treasury to the Treasury. The Secretary asks that an appropriation of but a million dollars be made immediately available.

Official news has been received at the British War Office from London that Gen. Graham's force, after a hard-fought battle, was intrenched south of Metemneh, and that he was in communication with Gen. Gordon. Stewart's force had several fights with the Arab rebels before it reached Metemneh. He was himself badly wounded, but is reported as doing well, although he will be disabled for the remainder of the present campaign. Five of El Mahdi's cousins were killed in the fight. Sir Herbert Stewart being wounded, Sir Charles Wilson assumed the command. During the engagement of the 19th ult. the British fought four hours behind a square of camels, which at one time became exhausted for want of water, and Gen. Wilson ordered a number of guardsmen to cut their way to the river, three miles distant, and return with rubber sacks with water. The guards labored their way through the Arabs, losing half of their number on the way to the river. Half of the remainder were killed on the way back, but they brought water enough to save the army. The next day the army reached the Nile. Soon after, one of Gen. Gordon's steamers came down the river bringing re-enforcements and provisions. Gen. Gordon reported that he could hold Khartoum for years. Gen. Lord Wolseley characterizes Gen. Stewart as the ablest and most dashing commander he has ever known. Gen. Stewart's wounds are expected to disable him from active service in the present campaign.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for the offices of Judge of the Supreme Court and Regents of the State University, will be held at the Westover Opera House, Ann Arbor, on Wednesday, February 25, 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m.

All voters of this State, irrespective of past party affiliations, who can unite with us in an effort for a reform of abuses, and a pure and economical administration of government, and all who favor a reform in the civil service, and a reduction and readjustment of our tariff laws and tariff taxation, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each five hundred votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than two hundred and fifty votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and each delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

JEROME EDDY, Chairman.
H. F. PENNINGTON, Secretary.
Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Mississippi with a population of one and one-third millions has only 4,295 dram shops. Wisconsin with about the same population has 6,400. Mississippi has thirteen counties where there are no licensed dramshops and where no license to keep one can be obtained. It looks very much as if Mississippi also enforces its license law where this prevails. A saloon-keeper of Jackson, the capital, was fined for violating the Sunday law of the state. Shortly afterwards, a civil suit was brought against him for the same violation, as by the statute prohibiting the sale of liquors on Sunday, the violator becomes liable to both a criminal and civil process. The suit was brought for $2,000, being the amount of the bond. After a long trial the case was submitted to the jury, which failed to agree. When the case was recalled at the recent term, the judge held that the saloonist's previous confession in the criminal proceeding, was conclusive of his guilt, and instructed the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, which was done. In cases of this kind the statute provides that half of the judgment recovered goes to the informer and the remainder to the public school fund.

An appeal was taken, but the case has become alarming to other saloon-keepers and one of them has been heard to say that as soon as his present license expires, he shall quit the business as it is impossible to follow it in Mississippi with any profit to himself or safety to his bondsmen.—[Union Signal.

Let's see. Mississippi is one of those hopeless democratic States which gave Cleveland a plurality of 83,000, and sends a solid democratic delegation to congress, while Wisconsin is almost the reverse, politically, having given Blaine over 14,000 plurality, and sends seven republicans to congress. And yet the g. o. p. would have us believe that it alone is the party of temperance and morality.

Notice to all Justices of the Peace.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 4.—The "act to prohibit justices of the peace or any judge or justice of any police court from sentencing or committing persons to the state house of correction and reformatory at Ionia in certain cases," goes into effects on Tuesday next. It reads as follows:

Section 1. The people of the state of Michigan enact that no justice of the peace or judge or justice of any police court shall sentence or commit any person to the state house of correction and reformatory at Ionia who may be convicted of the crime or offense of being disorderly, of being drunk, or of vagrancy, or for any violation of the provisions of chapter 83 of the compiled laws of 1871, relative to disorderly persons, as amended by act 193 session laws of 1883; or for the larceny of a less sum than $5.

National State Convention.

The National party of the State of Michigan will meet in State convention at Meade's Hall, Lansing, Wednesday, February 25, at 11 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of nominating candidates for Justice of the Supreme Court and Regents of the State University, and to transact such other business as may properly come before the convention. The basis of representation will be as follows: The delegates at large for each organized county and one additional delegate for each 200 votes and fractions thereof over even hundreds cast for Benjamin F. Butler in 1884.

And this is what is needed in northern Michigan, viz: railroads and good settlers. The soil is good, producing in abundance all kinds of crops, including clover, which makes a wonderful growth. Capt. Geo. Madison and wife have lost their third and last child by diphtheria. He was the first to be stricken down, but partially recovered, had a relapse, and died.

On our first page will be found a most interesting letter from M. J. Steckman, now in Florida. He expects to remain six weeks, and we hope to receive other letters before he returns.

A Lansing correspondent of a Detroit paper says that our representative, Mr. Hampton, is fast gaining notoriety as a fancy skater, and is being urged by his friends to give an exhibition.

Geo. W. Miller has rebuilt his show window, giving more room for his pets, and also fitting it up in excellent shape for showing fine goods at any time he chooses. Being made of fine wire cloth it is fly proof.

The Stopel Lumber Co., of East Jordan, have two million feet of hardwood logs on the bank of the Jordan river. They intend to put five million feet into the Jordan and two million feet in their yard. Some new machinery for the mill is contemplated for next season.

John Connor and Alden Chamberlin have formed a co-partnership to engage in the boot and shoe trade, with rooms one door north of Bridge Street house. They will dispose of the uninjured portion of Connor's stock removed from the fire, and add new as needed.

It is claimed by the Northwest Farmer that some creameries have adopted the practice of buying up stale butter, and churning it over in good butter milk, and then passing it off for genuine creamery butter. It is the old story of establishing a reputation and then imposing upon the credulity of the public.

The Record says that the report that H. O. Rose and family would live in Grand Rapids until their residence is rebuilt is untrue, but that they will remain in Petoskey and make their home at the Arlington. Mr. Rose expects to build a brick residence during the summer and fall in time for occupancy next winter.

The St. Louis, (Mich.) Republican states that J. M. Ashley, Jr. was at that place a few days since and stated that the prospects of the early extension of the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern railroad were never better than at present. He expects to begin work on the line north of St. Louis early in the spring.

D. C. Loveday & Co., of East Jordan, have leased for a term of years the docks of D. C. Loveday and Chas. Barber, and are building a tram road, which will be portable, the whole length of their docks for the purpose of loading vessels with dispatch. Along the entire front of the docks, which is being extended by its owners sixteen feet further out into the lake, they will put down a stationary track, with turntables at intervals of twelve feet, so that they can lay their portable track to interset with either turntable and run the cars north or south, and thus load a vessle at both hatchways at the same time.

An exchange suggest that those people who drive their teams into town with a heavy load, and leave them out in the cold while the poor brutes—we mean the drivers—get a warm lunch by a saloon fire, ought to have their horses driven to a good shelter and fed by the officer, and delivered to the owner upon payment of charges.

Dr. G. W. Crouter contemplates working up a trade in home-made baking powder. He has the apparatus for mixing, and can guarantee a better article for the money than any of the patent brands in the market, because he will make it in small quantities and always have it fresh. He will have it for sale at his drug store in a few days.

"The Herald Cook Book" is the title of a neat little volume just received, "compiled from receipts contributed by Grand Traverse housekeepers, and from the household department of the Grand Traverse Herald," and presented to the subscribers of the Herald for 1885. It is a well-made little book, and possesses an additional local interest over such works generally from having the names of some of the best housekeepers in the Traverse region attached to the recipes.

G. W. Crouter, local manager for the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., has just completed some much-needed improvements at the central office. The room in which the instruments are located has been partitioned so as to exclude all but the operator from the instruments and tables, with a desk and other conveniences for customers using the public phone, and the whole entirely separated from any noise or confusion likely to occur in his other business of a nature to interfere with the proper working of the phones. The doors are hung with spring hinges, making them noiseless and always properly closed. There is an evident disposition on the part of the manager here to keep well to the front in everything pertaining to the interests of the company or the accommodation of the public.

Replying to an item in the Boyne Statesman, discussing the county-seat question, the Petoskey Record says: "We appreciate the fact that when a paper is hanging on a particularly ragged financial edge, the editor thereof is not apt to be in a frame of mind for the exercise of christain charity, but still we would advise brother Badour to keep his linen on. Every body in Charlevoix county, and Emmet too for that matter, know pecfectly well that Boyne is a candidate for county seat honors. There would be reason and sense in locating the county seat at Boyne. It would be fairer for all concerned to put it there; and in our judgment Boyne would stand a better chance of eventually getting it, to keep Charlevoix as the county seat until the time was fully ripe for a permanent location and the erection of county buildings. We understand fully that the east end voted with South Arm to "spite Charlevoix." That's all well enough, providing that in "spiting Charlevoix," Boyne and her supporters do not put their own nose out of joint. If they declare "war to the knife" on Charlevoix, it may be possible that enough money will be planted in East Jordan to make a future removal to Boyne an impossibility. It is well enough to look a few years ahead in a matter of this kind."

Historical Society.

Society met as adjourned one week previous, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Loveday, on Tuesday evening last. The program included a violin solo by Asa Loveday, the paper of the evening by E. H. Green, instrumental duet by Mrs. F. A. Smith and Mrs. O. D. Wood, vocal duet by Miss Orser and A. D. Bradbeer, violin solo by Asa Loveday, recitation by Miss Orser, instrumental duet by Mrs. F. A. A New Departure

The Petoskey Record says:

The public will be interested to know that the Dock Company have leased the Petoskey Union Dock and Warehouse, to Hannah, Lay & Co. of Traverse City. The conditions of the lease are, that the rates for dockage as fixed by the dock company last season are to remain unchanged. That Hannah, Lay & Co., are to permit the landing of all boats whether of regular lines, or wild boats upon payment of the regular rates which obtained last year.

Hannah, Lay & Co., also agree to put two steamers upon the line between Traverse City and Petoskey, each of which shall make the round trip each day. The Grand Rapids will leave Petoskey every morning and run to Traverse City, returning to Petoskey in the evening.

The Faxton will leave Traverse City every morning, run through to Petoskey and return to Traverse City the same evening. On Sunday's the Grand Rapids will run to Cross Village and back. This arrangement will enable summer visitors both at Petoskey and Traverse City, to enjoy an all day's ride upon the waters of Grand Traverse and Little Traverse bays, returning home at night; and we predict that the new arrangement will prove very popular and pecuniarily profitable to Hannah, Lay & Co. Tickets between this line and the G. R. & I are to be interchangable. People can come up to Petoskey by rail, round by boat to Traverse City, and thence to Walton Junction on the regular round trip railroad ticket.

The Hannah Lay & Co., line from here to Mackinaw, will of course be discontinued. But there are rumors that one of the Detroit lines contemplate the putting on of semi weekly boats. We hope it is true.

STOLEN SWEETS.

BY HIRAM'S FEATHERSTONHAUGH.

When day's foot-lops bright have vanished
From the tiptoes of the eve,
When the red light is all in twilight,
Their gate then with sweets are weave,
Meet, all, meet me in the gloaming,
Gloaming, where the birds are flown.
Stolen sweets will lose in rapture
When we both have other's own.

Where the perfumed wings of zephyr
Sway the darkening timbers tall,
Where the rose leaves red are sighing
The earth as does as they fall,
Meet, all, meet me. I'll be waiting.
Waiting 'neath the linden bow.
Stolen sweets will lose their rapture
When we both have other grown.

In the sunshine here is gladness,
Here laughter is as may grow;
But there's something in the moonlight,
Meet, all, meet me in the gloaming,
Oh, such meet me in the gloaming,
Oh, such day with joy is sown.
Stolen sweets will lose their rapture
When we both have other grown.

I am waiting, I am watching;
Do I see yonder elm fall
Where the rose leaves in the moonlight
Drift? Tis but the fir tree's fall.
Meet, all, meet me; night is falling,
Falling over me here alone.
Stolen sweets will lose in rapture
When we both have other grown.

UNDECEIVED.

Agnatine Powers had never felt the fatigue caused by labor nor the hardship and suffering entailed by poverty; and one would have thought, to see her as she sat listlessly before the piano in her rich and tastefully furnished apartments, that the thoughts of woe and misery never found even a transient place in her breast. But although young and beautiful, and possessed of every luxury which money could purchase, or a refined taste could contribute, she imposed upon herself the duty of helping near the burdens of her sex who were less fortunate than she, by providing each day for the wants of some unhappy creature. For this purpose her trusty servant Peter was sent out every evening to investigate the condition of such as were in need of assistance, or to discover new objects for her generosity. At the time she is brought to our notice, her attitude indicates that she has been indulging in one of those harmless reveries called "day dreams." Her thoughts seem to wander far away from her surroundings, and even the crumpled letter which she holds in her hand has apparently ceased to excite her emotion. The reader may, however, glance at this letter. It was written in a plain, schoolgirl hand, and ran as follows:

MY KIND FRIEND: The trouble you have already taken in my behalf causes me to hesitate before granting you all I wish you to do. I have promised my greatest mercy; but as you requested me to notify you of something several, and as you are my only friend in whom I can confide, I feel it my duty to comply. The man who does wrong at one time, and acknowledges it, can atone by future good conduct; but the man who does wrong all his life, and still continues to do wrong, is a villain. I am confident I need not say more to you. The man whose every thought is pure, and whose every action will bear the strictest scrutiny, and who can look the world in the face without fear, is a happy man. Such a man I am, and such I intend to remain. Your friend,

MARY.

Miss Powers had read this letter an hour or so previous to our introduction to her, but now she seemed to have lost all interest in its contents.

Presently a servant entered bearing a card which he handed to his mistress. "Ah, Mr. Waltser," she muttered half aloud; "show him in, William." A moment later Mr. Waltser was ushered into the room. His appearance was that of a man about six and twenty, and over handsome but with a face filled with intelligence and a tall, well-proportioned frame. As his eyes met those of Miss Powers his countenance plainly told the admiration with which he regarded her. All his utmost soul seemed to center on the object on which they were fixed, as he said, after a moment's pause, "some money your father requested me to hand you." He also requested me to hand you." He also would find time to ask, now that Peter is ill, if I could be of any assistance by accompanying you on your visit to that poor girl to whom you spoke to him this morning."

"How thoughtful papa is," interrupted the girl; "and I am sure it is very kind of you, Mr. Waltser, to consent to render me such a service. I am quite certain you did not understand this as to be part of your duty when you entered the banking house of Powers, Farlow & Co."

The younger man was about to make some remark expressing his willingness to undertake the mission with so agreeable a companion, when he was interrupted by the entrance of a servant bearing the card of Mr. Nathan Barlow. Mr. Powers greeted him in his usual cordial manner, and the handsome face of Farlow, which deepened perceptibly when she expressed her sympathy for her poor countryman, and her contempt for the man who had so basely deceived her.

Just previous to their intended departure, Farlow gazed anxiously at his watch, and then, as if a sudden thought struck him, said:

"I am sorry, Augustine, that it will be impossible for me to accompany you to-night. I have an important engagement which I had entirely forgotten; you must defer your visit until to-morrow, when I shall be glad to assist you in doing so good a work."

With reluctance the young girl promised to comply with his request, and inquired what she knew of Mr. Powers' business with Farlow.

"Oh, there is no great time," responded Miss Powers; "I usually send Peter out shortly before dark. It is the time most people who deserve assistance are to be found at what they call their homes."

The other part of the question she seemed either not to desire to answer, perhaps, on account of its delicate nature, or else had forgotten it, at least it went unnoticed.

During this conversation Waltser had remained a quiet spectator. Several times he attempted to say that, should his services would not be required, he had better hasten back to the office, but on each occasion he was interrupted. Now, however, he entered the apartment, and was soon on his way down town.

When Augustine and Farlow were left alone, the conversation turned upon matters which more nearly concerned their personal affairs and prospects. For it must be known that Nathan was Miss Powers' affianced, and their marriage was to take place at no distant day. That the only child of that proud aristocrat, Schuyler Powers, should marry a man of Nathan Farlow's wealth and social position seemed but natural. Mr. Farlow was what would be termed "a man of the world;" handsome in appearance and fascinating in manner, he had gained the parental affections of this lovely girl, and as they conversed together on the bright autumn afternoon, no one could have fathomed the depth of her feeling. Once during the conversation, when Miss Powers reverted to the sad case of the young girl they were about to visit, and pictured the cruel treatment and misery she had endured, a keen observer might have noticed a flush pass over the handsome face of Farlow, which deepened perceptibly when she expressed her sympathy for the poor creature, and her contempt for the man who had so basely deceived her.

The Florida Mosquito.

That there are mosquitoes and seasons where mosquitoes are of enormous size and ferocity and in great numbers, writes a Florida correspondent of The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, is not to be denied. Away from the coast mosquito-bars are the exception, but I think that during a part of every summer people everywhere would promote their comfort if they provided their beds with them. It is a curious fact that the presence of mosquitoes in great numbers depends upon excessive droughts. In a normal condition of things, when the ponds remain full, the fish, in which the ponds abound, consume the "wigglers," and mosquitoes are only produced in such wet places as are destitute of fish. But when the ponds become—as they sometimes do—compactly dried up, and are again filled by the rains before they are restocked with fish, the wigglers reappear, and mosquitoes are generated in countless millions. But the fish presently return from some unknown hiding-places (it is a mystery to which I have observed a parallel in Siskiyou county, California), and in a few weeks reposside the ponds with young fish and the mosquitoes disappear. On the coast, while they are never so numerous as in the interior, they are more persistent, though scarcely rising to the proportions of a serious pest except during July, August and September. The drizzling—and sometimes this is a simple affair—of the neighboring sand-hills, where the tide and rains create brackish lagoons, tends greatly to mitigate them.

Sand-flies are just as bad, and no worse than in light sandy soils anywhere where dogs and swine are allowed to circulate in or close about the house. They are no worse than they are in a certain class of hotels on the sand-lots of San Francisco. The presence of fleas to any considerable extent is a reproach to the personal habits of the inhabitants wherever found. Much the same may be said of bonse-flies—they accuse the farmer himself. But no house, whether in Florida, or elsewhere, ought to be without screens. There is a large rattlesnake, not exactly the same species as that of the yeast and north, and, away from the coast, the ground rattlesnake, and almost alongits and lagoons several varieties of the moccasin. It is said that the native Floridians never kill a moccasin—no snake, as there are several varieties of them which coast in making war on the poisonous kinds. If I were living in the country here, I should, as a measure of security, either keep shrubbery out of the yard, and vigorously empoy a lawn-mower, or I should (like the native Californians) oxclude all vegetation from the yard, and keep the ground beaten down smooth and hard. I have yet to see my first snake in Florida.

A Headdress of Sponge.

Did I not tell you some time ago, when I was writing up mushroom culture, that if you waited long enough I would find something newer still than that vegetable to decorate your heads with? and of the needful sponge turns up just in the nick of time, as a fashion caprice, wher the mood seemed to have yielded up its last possible height of nonsense in the range of things.

It's quite funny, as Lou Harrison would say, "very, very funny," this idea of wearing as your head the article of thing with which you wash your head, but still the sponge as a novelty is immense—would it be more immense should the wearer of the same be caught in a shower.

As it is, the sponge is cut flat, and decorated with loops of gold thread stuck into the holes, as it would be, it would swell up under that shower, making the head appear as a caldron, the golden loops retiring as an unheard willin their soft recess. Oh! I would grow—well, all I have in my purse—a new nickel to see the courageous woman who would go out in a rainstorm with a sponge on the top of her pate. Nevertheless, being in mode, you can make up a sponge chapeau infinitely cheap. Per example, I see old men carrying baskets full of the coarse sand along the streets. These are perfectly worthless as sackets, but for capots—oh m-i! Think of it! You can beat down, the man, who asks tenscents apiece, into giving you two for fifteen cents; four bits worth of gold thread, judiciously g ued in loops into each one; a yard or two of mock lace, crowned up with a little gold bronze, and you have a bonnet fit for anyone. Even Langtry might be proud of the latest novelty.

Charles Sumner's Widow.

A rumor that the well-known American banker in London, Mr. Junius S. Morgan, is to marry the divorced wife of Charles Sumner has obtained a limited circulation. It has been published in a New Orleans paper as a fact already announced by authority in London. It will very naturally create some surprise, for Mr. Morgan is about 70 years old, and was supposed to have passed the marriage point. His first wife died six or seven years ago. She was a daughter of John Pierpont, the American poet, who died at Medford, Mass., in 1866. He was at the time holding an office in the Treasury Department at Washington, which had been given him in recognition of his services as chaplain in a Massachusetts regiment during the war. Mrs. Morgan was a lady of great culture and was for nearly half a century a worthy companion of her distinguished husband. They had two or three children, the best known of whom is Mr. John Pierpont Morgan, of the New York banking firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co. J. S. Morgan went over to London in 1857 or thereabouts with George Peabody, who that year came over to America and established the Peabody Institute at his old home, Danvers, Mass. Mr. Morgan had already made a fortune. He began life as a clerk in a cotton goods establishment at Hartford, Conn., and after prospering till he became a partner in the house sold out and went to Boston, where he became associated with one of the largest importing concerns there. It was thus that he got his London acquaintance and that he attracted the admiration and friendship of Mr. Peabody. When he went over to London he became associated with Mr. Peabody in the banking business. He was the "C." of George Peabody & Co., and immediately became a great favorite with the first people of London and American visitors. He is a gentleman of splendid appearance, the most refined tastes and agreeable manner. The banking house of J. S. Morgan & Co. is known all over the world, and through it most Americans transact their London business. Mr. Morgan is worth at least $20,000,000, and has a country house near London that is noted for its Elizabethan architecture and beautiful surroundings. The lady to whom they say he is to be married wears the name of Mrs. Alice Mason. She discarded the Sumner name when she got the divorce from the celebrated Massachusetts statesman. She was a widow when he married her, and the old husband's name was Mason. The latter name she chose to keep. There has always been a mystery about her separation from Sumner. They were married soon after the war, in 1866, I believe, and the next year she got her divorce. They lived together but a few months, when she left him in disgust. Sumner was then an old man and had always lived a bachelor, and he did not long survive his unfortunate matrimonial venture. Mrs. Mason is not yet an old woman, having been quite young and very attractive in personal appearance when she was married to Sumner. She has an ample fortune in her own right.—New York World.

Labor and Longevity.

Ericsson, the veteran inventor, was 81 years old recently. He is in excellent health, and works, it is said, fifteen hours a day, proving an exception to the general rule, like many others that are received without question, is a fallacy. Perhaps it might be fairly asserted that busy men live longer than idle men; that work is, after all, the true elixir of life. Many noteworthy instances where longevity coincides with a remarkable mental activity will easily occur to the reader.

Was not Sophocles more than 90, when, to prove that he was not in his dotage—as his sons charged—he began to get his money—he wrote one of his greatest tragedies? Did not Humboldt do more work at forescore than many bright men do at forty? Goethe, as every one knows, died with pen in hand at the age of 82. Von Ranke, the foremost of living historians, has just published another volume of his Universal History; he will be 89 years next December. Carlyle and Emerson lost none of their vigor until they reached three-score years and ten.

And to-day, who imagines that Oliver Wendell Holmes, a ready on the verge of 75, is old? Longfellow did some of his best work shortly before his death, at 75, and Whittier is now two years older than that. The wise energies, whose sum in many directions are known as Victor Hugo, show no signs of decadence, although it is now more than eighty-two years since Victor Hugo was born. Historians, it may be remarked, have usually been long lived.

Voltaire died at 84. Thierry and Michelet, at 76. Michael Angelo, at 87. George Bancroft is now 85, and George Tickner Ticknor is 85. In painting we have had several recent examples of great men whose power for manship did not diminish through age. Gladstone is nearly 75, and Palmerston was Prime Minister at the time of his death, two days before he had completed 81 years. Benjamin Franklin, in the last century, lived to be 84.

A Brooklyn burgo policeman says: "It is a curious thing that I am never asked the way by the Chinese. All other nationalities banner with their questions about the bridge, the railroad, etc., but John Chinaman, strangely enough, every time knows where he is going and the way to get there."

The British have records of 225 earthquakes in the last 356 years, and the seas are still there.

Epidemics and Temperature.

It has happened over and over again that an epidemic at a particular spot has lingered on for several weeks in a desultory fashion before its real intensity was felt. This was the case at Toulon itself in 1865, when the mortality for the first few weeks remained even below what it has been on the present occasion, rising suddenly to about fifty deaths a day in the middle of September. A sudden rise or fall is generally to be explained by a change in the weather. Nothing is more likely than the decline of an epidemic of cholera in one place, or all over the country when the winter cold begins. On the other hand, the disease usually reaches its height as the temperature goes up, although the rule is not an invariable one. Moisture and heat together are much more likely to cause an increase of cholera than heat and draught, and, in fact, the autumnal months have generally seen a larger mortality than spring and summer.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Georgia gentleman is reported in the Atlanta Constitution as saying: "I can take forty Jersey cattle on a good farm and make more money than any other farmer ever made with forty negro slaves on the same land. A man who owns a herd of registered Jerseys and a Georgia farm is richer than a man who owned the same number of slaves before the war. If every freed slave in Georgia," said he, warming with the subject, "was replaced to-day with a good Jersey, in ten years Georgia would be richer than if the emancipation proclamation had never been written. You'd better not print this, though; for if you do the Yankees might take a notion to come down and free the cows."

Love's Wane.

What, if love grow weary with long waiting,
Pained with the frequent ingoing of long years
Dissatisfied of love, that knows but tears,
And winter passion, but no spring-time's mating;
Tho' sick at heart at each long hope's abating,
Seeing in fact some sin' not as remote,
To cringe and twine soft arms about whose throat
Is joy enough to drown a whole world's prating—

Shall we condemn, who know not of the sorrow
Endured beyond endurance, and the pain
Of love unsatisfied, or shall we borrow
That which hereafter we may count as gain?
Love's flame burns bright to-day, and dies to-morrow;
And love, unfed with love, is but love's wane.
—J. Aleen Ritchie in the Current.

NOTED SENATORS.

Pen Pictures of Some of the Prominent Men From the South.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, in a recent letter thus describes some of the more prominent public men of the South.

Lamar has no desire to leave the Senate, as has been stated before in this correspondence, as his physical health would not permit of his undertaking the labor of any Cabinet position. He is obliged at the present time to avoid everything in the way of excitement. He, though his great knowledge of public affairs and his excellent judgment, has gradually grown into the position of general counselor to his party in the South. His advice is not always followed, but there are few men in the South who would undertake any political act of importance without consulting with him. His health does not permit the amount of reading which has hitherto occupied the leisure of his studious life. He therefore gives up more of his time to talking with his friends than he has ever done in his more active days. In his rooms upon First street he is nearly always surrounded by a crowd. He wraps himself up in a red Oriental dressing-gown, and with black silk Mandarin shoes upon his feet for slippers this eccentric looking man will sit as a teacher at the head of a class in political philosophy. I was in his room one day last winter when there were a number of Mississippians about him. The Senator sat with a great mass of hair falling thickly across his face, nearly hiding it, and twisting his fierce long mustache as the lower part of his face could be seen below his long beard. He sat listening and talking to those about him until the room darkened. Suddenly the Senator paused in the midst of his discourse, jumped up, and said: "Why, really, gentlemen, you must excuse me. I have an engagement to dine. I have only twenty minutes to dress and get up town." He began tearing off his red dressing-gown as he flew across the room and disappeared behind a curtain which inclosed a recess opening into his front parlor. In exactly six minutes by the watch the Senator returned in full evening dress, and, with the simplicity of a very much younger man, called his negro servant to light the gas so that the company could inspect him in his resplendent attire and see if he would pass muster.

The common sense of Cockrell amounts almost to genius. He was one of the most successful cavalry officers in the Confederacy. He fought fairly and honorably during the War, and when it was over he accepted its results without question. He has never asked Congress to remove his political disabilities. He came here in 1866 and got Frank Blair to go up in the White House and ask Andrew Johnson to pardon him. It was done with the understanding that there should be no mention of it made in the newspapers. Cockrell came here one morning and went home with his pardon in his pocket the evening of the same day without saying one word to any one about it outside of those immediately interested in procuring it. Nothing is better illustrative of his shrewdness and reserve than the fact that no one outside the circumstance at all until the opposition to restoration of Southern men to their old privileges was practically done away with.

Senator Cockrell is in his 51st year. He was born, bred, and educated in Missouri. He is over six feet in height. His figure is very broad and powerful. He has a large hook nose, which stands out in sweeping line in harmony with the next curve which runs from the top of the nose over his nearly bald head. His hair is a bluish gray, worn at moderate length about his thick neck. A fierce cavalry mustache is twisted under his hawk nose. A long straggling beard hangs as straight as so many strings from the sharp chin of his sallow, high-cheek-boned face. His eyes are a pale gray blue, which can twinkle with humor when he is pleased or can be as cold as steel when he is in the opposite mood. He is a lawyer by profession and a prodigious worker. There is no Senator who looks more carefully after the interests of the Government than he. He is always in his seat in the Senate chamber, and skillfully disguised indeed must be the job that can pass his vigilantly-guarded eye. While he is a chronic objector to the thousand and one jobs which are constantly springing up under various forms, he is a most liberal legislator in what really relates to good government. He is very democratic in his manners, and when not at the Capitol can be found at his house with his wife and children, to whom he is thoroughly devoted.

Senator Harris is over 60 years of age. He, like Cockrell, was bred and educated in his native State of Tennessee. He has had a large experience in public life. He was a member of Congress at one of the most stirring periods of our history—in 1849—and was reelected in 1851. He was a figure in the debates of that period which resulted, in the Congress after his retirement, in the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He is a man of slight figure and of medium height. He is quite round-shouldered. His face is regular-featured and smooth-shaven with the exception of a long white mustache, which he waxes in military fashion. During the War he served upon the staff of the Confederate commander of the Army of the Tennessee. He is a man of moderate means.

Senator Coke is a man of enormous figure. Everything about him appears to have been constructed upon a large scale. He is very large boned, and these large bones are thickly covered with great layers of flesh. His hands are thickly covered with hair, and he has to struggle with a razor to keep a space clean around his eyes and mouth. His great beard and his enormous stock of hair are still dark brown in color—almost untouched with gray—although he is in his 56th year. He was in the Confederate army, but not as a leader. He is one of the few Southern men in public life to-day who entered the Confederate army as a private. He rose to the rank of Captain. He is a man of intense convictions, with a very high sense of personal honor and an extraordinary sense of his own personal dignity. He has a strong hold upon the confidence of his people. He was elected Judge of the State Supreme Court of Texas in 1866, and was removed therefrom by Gen. Sheridan "as an impediment to reconstruction." This one act made Coke Governor in 1873. He was elected three by a majority of 50,000, and was reelected by a majority of 102,000. He has been in the Senate ever since. He is not an orator who is appreciated in the Senate, as his voice is the roar of the giant that he is; yet his Democratic sentiments are loud of him and have a great respect for his judgment.

Senator Vance is a tall, shambling-figured, carelessly-dressed man in his 55th year. He was born in N. th Carolina and educated in that State and Tennessee. He was a Colonel in the Confederate service. He has a round, full head, set low upon a short, thick neck. It is surmounted by a mass of straight, iron-gray hair. His red, fat, full face is smooth shaven, with the exception of a thick mustache. He is a lawyer by profession, and has a great local reputation as a wag. He is what is called an alleged humorist. His style of wit and humor is much better appreciated, however, upon the stump than in the Senate. To do him full justice, though, it should be said that he makes few efforts in that direction in the Senate.

Distribution of the Sense of Taste.

Taste, however, is not equally distributed over the whole surface of the human palate. There are three distinct regions or tracts, each of which has to perform its own special office and function. The tip of the tongue is concerned mainly with pungent and acrid tastes; the middle portion is sensitive chiefly to sweets and bitters; while the back or lower portion confines itself almost entirely to the flavors of roast meats, butter, oils, and other rich or nutritious substances. There are very good reasons for this subdivision of faculties in the tongue, the object being, as it were, to make each piece of food undergo three separate examinations (like "smalls," "mods," and "greats" at Oxford), which must be successively passed before it is admitted into full participation in the human economy. The first examination, as we shall shortly see, gets rid at once of substances which would be actively and immediately destructive to the very tissues of the mouth and body; the second discriminates between poisonous and chemically harmless food-stuffs; and the third merely decides the minor question whether the particular food is likely to prove thin and there wholesome or indigestible to the particular person. The sense of taste proceeds, in fact, upon the principle of gradual selection and elimination; it refuses first what is positively destructive, next what is more remotely deleterious, and finally what is only indirectly or over luscious.—Grant Allen, in Popular Science Monthly for February.

Oscar Wilde has been saving some very sensible things in his lecture on "Dress," which he is now delivering in England. He strongly censures the fashion-makers who arbitrarily decide that a certain color shall be "the only wear" at a future time. He says it would be quite as ridiculous for musicians to announce that B flat should be the fashionable color next winter. Wilde's common sense very frequently forces its way through his massing affectations.—The Current.

EASTERN.

At a Socialist meeting at New York the other night, rioting began, and upon police interference, the gathering grew violent and assailed the officers. The latter used their clubs freely, several people made the mob. Justus Schwab was arrested, and refused release on bail.

O'Donovan Rossa was shot at five times in New York, by an English woman giving the name of Violet Dudley. The attack took place in Chambers street, near Broadway. Only the first shot took effect, making a serious wound in the back. The woman was seized by a city marshal with the smoking revolver in her hand. Rossa was led to the Chambers street hospital, where he made a statement that his assailant sought two interviews for the purpose of contributing money to the dynamite cause. She expressed regret at the failure of her attempt.

When Gov. Begole entered upon the discharge of his duties there were no sudden changes of office, all officials removed being given sufficient notice of when they would be superceded. He even retained many republican officials on account of their fitness and qualifications, although by so doing he provoked bitter opposition from many of the leaders of his own party. Gov. Alger gave the Begole appointees no warning, and all the democratic and green back appointees were bounced in stanter. The republicans ought at least to have been as liberal as Gov. Begole, for the sake of their civil service reform pretensions if nothing else. As it is there will not probably be a republican postmaster in any village in Michigan by Jan. 1st '86, and the unfortunate republicans can thank Gov. Alger's administration for the lose of their accustomed fodder.—[Independent.

Smoking, or a Home.

Between fifteen and twenty three years there are tens of thousands of young men damaging themselves irretrievably by tobacco. You either use very good tobacco, or cheap tobacco. If you use cheap tobacco, I want to tell you why it is cheap. It is a mixture of burdock, lamp-black, sawdust, colt's foot, plantain leaves, fuller's earth, lime, salt, alum, and a little tobacco. You cannot afford, my young brother, to take such a mess as that between your lips. If, on the other hand, you use costly tobacco, let me say, I do not think you can afford it. You take that which you expend, and will expend, if you keep the habit all your life, and put it aside, and it will buy you a home, and it will buy you a farm, to make you comfortable in the afternoon of life. A merchant of New York gave this testimony: "In early life I smoked six cigars a day, at six and a half cents each; they averaged that. I thought to myself one day: 'I'll just put aside all the money I am consuming in cigars, and all I would consume if I kept on in the habit, and I will see what it will come to by compound interest.'" And he gives this treasonable statistic: "Just day completed thirty-nine years since by the grace of God I was emancipated from the filthy habit, and the saving amounted to the enormous sum of $240,102 03 by compound interest. We saved in the city, on the counters, who had learned something of the enjoyment of economy all items that natural vices to their grandparents, hoped for a home among the green fields. I found a way [illegible] about the country for sale. Then eight acres now stand into requisition, and I found that it amounted to a sufficient sum to purchase the place, and it is mine. I wish all American boys could see how my children enjoy their home, as they watch the vessels with their white sails that course along the Sound. Now, boys, you take your choice: smoking without a home, or a home without smoking. Young Reaper.

MIRAGE.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

We'll read that book, we'll sing that song,
Just when'tide, when the fates are strong;
When the gibbs are free, and voices clear;
Some happy time within the year—
The days troop by with careless tread,
The song unsung, the book unread.

We'll see that friend and make him feel
The weight of friendship, true as steel,
Some flower of sympathy bestow—
But time sweeps on with steady flow,
Until, with quick, reproachful tear,
We lay our flowers upon his bier.

And still we walk the desert sands,
And still with trifles fill our hands,
While ever, just beyond our reach,
A saints' purpose shows to each
The deeds we have not done, but willed,
Reasons to haunt us—unfulfilled.

"THE WEB OF OUR LIFE IS OF TANGLED YARN."

BY ANNABEL B. WHITE (BUSY BEE).

The old house seemed to sleep in the golden sunshine of a royal August afternoon. It was judiciously shaded by large oaks.

Lest the reader should pronounce this a paradox, let me hasten to add that these trees, although they attracted every wanton breeze, and imparted a grateful shade to yard, lawn, and the deep piazzas, yet they were so far from the house itself that there was no danger of their boughs tapping like ghostly fingers against the windows, nor yet that far more disagreeable sound of the scraping of tree branches across the roof and gables.

So the golden sunshine streamed clearly down on the old weather-beaten building. But in spite of this fact the house was a notably cool one on the hottest summer day.

Col. Lester loved trees, but he had a horror of the malarious damp and destructive mildew they caused if they grew carelessly near his dwelling.

On this particular afternoon every door and window was open, but the shutters were closed to keep out the sun and to admit air in the air. The large hall-door stood so widely open it seemed itself gasping for air, and the two doors on the left and right of the breezy hall also stood ajar.

It was two o'clock—two o'clock in the sunny South, at which hour all nature and all humanity seem to seek repose from the toil and heat of the day in this dolce far niente land.

The negro laborers slumbered peacefully under trees; the mules rolled and wallowed luxuriously in the cool mud; nodded sleepily over the feed troughs; the turkeys and chickens stood lazily about on one leg under the houses; the servants and inmates of the mansion slept. There was no sound in all the air except the drowsy hum of insects, the shrill chirp of the crickets in the grass, and the fretful, peevish cry of those speckled Arabs of the poultry-yard—Guineas.

Inez Lester had gone into the library to renew the water in the stand of flowers on every day placed near her father's desk. After her task was finished the soft coolness of the red and white striped lounge over wooed her to slumber. Her father would come comfortably in his wicker easy-chair, placed on the east end of the north piazza, with a large newspaper spread over his embonpoint visage.

No one in his sense ever expects or dresses for visitors on these hot summer days in Southland, till the fiery red orb of day marks 3 or 4 o'clock p. m. So Inez quietly pattered, as she lay asleep on the comfortable lounge, with her lovely flowing sheer white wrapper draping her exquisite limbs.

Well, it was 2 o'clock when the sound of leisurely footsteps could have been heard on the front walk—could have been heard had any one been awake to hear them, we must add.

But the house slept on like an enchanted castle, and even the lazy hounds scattered over yard and piazzas did not so much as open a sleepy eye when a muscular masculine hand struck the hall-door with vigorous knuckles.

The knock was repeated, but elicited no response. Noting the hospitably open doors, the stranger coolly entered, and unfortunately walked into the room on his left. Had he gone into the room on his right, he would have found the correct thing. It certainly looked inviting enough, with its furniture upholstered in cretonne—a creamy ground, lightly sprinkled with moss rosebuds and delicate green leaves—and was most evidently the parlor.

But chance led him to the library where Inez lay sleeping on the broad red and white stripes which covered her resting place. And he was not responded with curtains and chairs. He paused on the threshold, discreetly, and in his embarrassment more completely slightly. Immediately, Inez opened her heavy-lidded eyes, and at the sight of that unknown figure framed in the doorway, she started up, every faculty alert.

"Who are you, sir?" she demanded, haughtily.

"Carl Vogel, at your service." the gentleman bowed.

"Sir, you are no gentleman to thus intrude into a lady's presence.

"My dear young lady, I thought I was expected. I am the artist whom your father invited from the city of New York to paint your—ah—portrait."

He did not really know if she were the one whose portrait he was to paint; but, astute man, he had long ago learned that delicate flattery is never wasted on "fair women."

She graciously unbent and accepted his card.

"I beg your pardon, and will call papa at once. But we were mistaken in the day and hour. Papa said you would come to-morrow at 10 o'clock."

"Which I intended, but finishing a picture sooner than I anticipated, I ran away from all other engagements, for I needed the recreation of country life."

"If you will be so kind as to sit down, and—excuse me," and deeply embarrassed, but not revealing it by walk or manner, Inez left the room in quest of her father. "That he should see me in this wrapper," was her mortified thought, quite unconscious that Carl, as an artist, must certainly admire her more in that garb than if she were habited in "full dress." But being a woman, she could not, or would not, lay the balm of this soothing knowledge to her harrowed soul.

When Col. Lester entered a few moments after, Carl Vogel was welcomed in a more hospitable manner than Inez had accorded him.

"Everybody and everything goes to sleep in the South after our early dinner, and no doubt after you became accustomed to us you will easily fall into our indolent ways. You mention the 'city' as if it were but a step away, but you will speedily discover that New York and its customs are further away than you seem to think. Yes, I had taken a fancy to have Inez' portrait painted, and as you mentioned your intention of taking a leisurely tour through the South when I was at your studio last spring, I was quite determined to have you stop with us several weeks. I regret that our welcome has seemed so churlish, but we did not expect you till to-morrow."

"Certainly; but how am I to find the dining-room?" Carl pleasantly asked.

"I'g wine show ye dey way?" the man affirmed, and in a few moments Carl ventured out, freed from the dust of travel, and attired in fresh linen.

Down the inevitable hall, across a broad, open passage, and into some other door. Col. Lester turned away from a window and came to meet his guest.

This was the dining-room. The floor was stained a rich walnut, and rose-pink shades of carpet and paper on the walls a delightful glow, and made the snowy damask, white china and cut glass look quite inviting a welcome as cordial as the owner's.

A pale, quiet-looking lady rose from a chair and Col. Lester introduced, "Inez' cousin in fact if not in blood, Mrs. Strathmore."

Carl was presently attentive.

"I must tell you more about her, for I know you must think so strangely of her—perhaps you misjudge her. Seven years ago she married Fred Strathmore. He is well enough off to keep her in ease, but, instead, every negro on the place is pressed into the fields, for cotton is Fred's king. Francia cooks, washes, and irons, and never complains. She has nothing to wear but calicos, although Fred has plenty of gold. He can no more appreciate the beauties of her mind and character than he could do a bit of fine sculpture. She allows none of us to help her, and her pitiful little garden, orchard, and flowers are cultivated by her own hands. She is an artist—all those pictures you saw she painted; and Fred sneers at them, and says if she were to sew, or do something else useful, she would be of some account. She does all the sewing for Fred's laborers, as it is paid for out of their wages, and saves Fred so much money. Why she married him I can't explain—none of us can, but the fact remains—she married him.

"He is not a polished man; he can't be, for his whole soul is bound up in money getting and saving. He plants nothing but cotton and some grain. He does not believe in orchards or vegetables—that is for women, he says. Francia has not painted a picture in four years—she is just 25 and but four years older than I. She says she will never paint again."

All this was very unprudent in impulsive Inez, who was a girl of variable moods, and just now the spirit possessed her to disclose to this stranger the sad story of her unmarried sister. Carl listened with grave attention, driving slowly and with head bent in a reverie meanwhile.

Injudicious Inez!

It is weeks after—eight weeks, and a horse is fastened near the Strathmore gate, while the rider thereof stands moodily and with folded arms in the whole entrance—door and the chair in which sad-faced Francia sits.

His hat has fallen to the floor and been unheeded by both across the passage, and now lies mutely against the wall as if imploring its heedless master to pick it up and go.

Mrs. Strathmore is speaking—head bent and hands folded tightly in her lap. She is audibly telling Carl Vogel the same thing his hat so mutely protests.

"I do not at all understand how we came to this dreadful pass," she says, in a pitiful voice, not lifting the lout head. "You must go away at once. It is dishonorable for me to listen to you, and worse than dishonorable for you to utter such mad words."

"You drive me to an uncertain, wretched future. I shall love no woman as I have loved you since the first day I saw you, and it maddens me to see you driving me from you to a miserable existence you lead now—your life is wasted—and you could be free."

"Free! How?" the cruel word she looks up with a gleam in her eyes that would seem like hope in another woman's eyes—but for her hope is for ever dead."

"Divorce?" he answers, sententiously. She starts, and draws away from him. "You use the cold-blooded word," he answers, coldly. "There is but one divorce for Southrons—death!"

He walks to the door—to the floor, and picks up his reproachful hat.

"Good-by, Francia," he says, not coming near her, and not offering his hand.

She stands up.

"Good-by," he cries wildly, swiftly approaching her still form. "I cannot part from you so—"

And then he takes the trembling woman in his strong arms, bows down to his aching heart, kisses her a dozen times, seats her gently in her chair, and rushes away.

She does not weep, she does not even cover her blanched face with her thin brown hands, but gazes after that disappearing horseman with a strained, mournful gaze, as if she would photograph its impalpable form.

That image never leaves her.

Three years pass away.

One day Fred in his haste to have a certain field gleaned properly, remained there till 2 o'clock under a hot summer sun, thereby incurring a fever. He got home with a terrible pain in his head.

"It is nothing," he told his anxious wife; "a headache. I shall get up in the morning."

But in the morning he was raving with delirium, and in a week he was dead; and then Francia rested once more in her father's house.

Poor woman! How poor? Fred had left all to her, for there were no children, but mountains of gold could never offset those ten years of misery with him from her crushed heart and dwarfed mind.

As soon as she became strong enough to travel, the family went to Europe—and there they ran across Carl Vogel.

"Yes, I have been in Italy three years, he told them, looking nonchalantly, and with a secret, guilty joy at Francia's widow's weeds. "You know I was born and reared in New York, but I was educated at German universities, and then spent three years in Italy studying art—my last three I have spent the same way."

They had met in a public garden, and Carl manœuvered so successfully he soon had Francia to himself.

"Francia, you are free—and I love no woman but you. Can you not say you love me?"

Francia hung her head like a shy young girl, and not like a woman of twenty-nine.

"And you loved me in the old days, too?" he cried, exultantly.

"I cannot say—I pitied you, but—myself worst of all."

"Well, pity is akin to love," he consforted himself and her.

In a year they were wed, and at 30 Francia realized her girlish dream of a good husband's love and appreciation.

THREE MEN LYNCHED.

The Jefferson Murderers Shot and Hanged at Audubon, Iowa, by Masked Men.

A Desperate Resistance Made by Wilson and Smythe—Cicero Jefferson Submits Meekly.

(Audubon (Iowa) special.)

Early this morning a mob killed Joel J. Wilson, John A. Smythe, and Cicero B. Jefferson, confined in the County Jail awaiting trial for hanging Hiram J. Jefferson, on April 21 last.

On Saturday last Judge Toofloorn granted a change of venue in the case, on motion of the prisoner's counsel, and trial was set for Monday next at Atlantic. This action caused the people to such an extent that a masked meeting was held and proceeded to the County Jail at about 2 o'clock this morning, and demanded the keys of the cell. The Sheriff refused, and refused to alarm the citizens of the town by firing of the pistol. This the mob had guarded against by stationing outposts over the city and forcing all who endeavored to leave their residences to retire indoors. The crowd numbered five hundred, and after battering down the door to the cell-house, which was also locked with picks and crowbars to make an opening large enough for a man to pass through, they rushed in with sledge-hammers and battering a white mask, to distinguish him from the crowd, who were black masks, conducted the warlord forcing an entrance, into the cells. The cells are arranged in front of the two cells, the leader demanded that the three defendants surrender. Smythe and Wilson—came out, and gave assurance to the mob that they were large quantities on hand, and would fight to the last. Jefferson, however, did not appear, and upon the mob entering his cell he was found in a corner, and was dragged out by his clothing, and at this a man carrying a lantern held it up, and the leader shot through the lantern, killing him.

The murderer was secured in an iron cell with the two who were ordered to surrender. After this prisoner surrendered, Wilson came toward his hangman out of the mouth, and refused to come out, and two—but were finally taking effect—one finally below the left shoulder, and he was hit in the mouth with an iron bar, he then begged them to kill him outright, and not torture him. Another shot was now fired, taking effect in the upper part of his chest, and he immediately fell dead. Hopes were thrown over the heads of Smythe and Wilson and the leader descended to the jail yard, and ordered them were arising up. The second cell was then opened and Chester Jefferson ordered to step out. As soon as he appeared a rope was thrown around his neck and he was dragged down the to a hand-stand in the public square, about two hundred feet distant. Here he was asked if he was guilty of the murder of his father. He replied that he was. The rope was then thrown around the thereof surrounding the stand, and the other end thrown over the beam in the business. "As you sowest your father my lord Arth, so you reap, so may God have mercy on earth." After this hanging the Sheriff was notified that the mob had done its full work, and had been a mass of pulp. My pulse was unfathomable. In my career I recognized only a few of the most extraordinary cases of the kind. Sometimes I was called to attend a patient in the early stages of disease, and I could not detect the pain. For six days I struggled with a case of cancer. The disease which attack those organs are among the most fatal and obstinate, and are usually preceded by the severe pains of growing weakness. The best physicians under such circumstances be flustered. Extremely Delicate.

Lonisa Pinkney, a colored school teacher, boarded at the house of "Guinea Nigger" Dan. Lonisa had been educated with great care. Not only her mind, but her tastes, particularly in matters of diet, had received instruction. It soon became evident that the table of "Guinea Nigger" Dan was entirely too ordinary for Lonisa. The conventional dishes of the colored race were scorned by her. Dan, observing her high disdain, shook his head and remarked to his wife:

"Get shen wil dat gal 'fore she's er week older. Er 'colt ken sometimes fling up his head so high dat he'll stumble ober a leg. She may make fun o' me all she wants ter, but when she turns up dat flat nose at de dvilds whint it hab pleased de Lawd ter put afore her, w'y den, authin' rises on my back like de bristles on er swamp hog. Jes' 'fore she gits ercrost Arter erwhile I'll gin her authin ter smell erbout."

"I don't like this meat," said Louisa, at dinner.

"What de matter wid de meat, chile?" asked Dan.

"Oh, it's coarse. It's hog meat, is it not?"

"Yes, hog meat, chile."

"Well, I don't like hog meat. It isn't delicate enough."

"Likes delicate meat, does yer chile?"

"Yes, and must have it."

"Uh, huh, an' yer shall hab it, too. Hab yer some mighty delicate meat termor, at dinner."

"Oh, I thank you, kindly."

"Yes, o' 'cose yer does."

When the teacher sat down to dinner the following day, old Dan, after waiting until the fastidious boarder had begun to eat, said:

"How yer like dat meat?"

"Oh, it's splendid."

"Delicate 'nuff ter suit de palate o' yer mighty fine nose?"

"It is just right, thanks."

"Uh, huh, glad ter heah it. Yer doan know how much trouble I had ter git dat sorter meat. Had ter look all ober de country 'fore I found' hit. At last I got hold o' er lamb——"

"Alive me to thank you for your trouble."

"Not er tall, chile; not er tall. Hunted 'cose long time 'fore I foun' one."

"Why, I didn't know that sheep were so scarce."

"Oh, da ain't scarce in gen'al. Hunted er long time 'fore I foun' one dat I wanted. Yer said yer wanted delicate meat, an' I wanted ter git it fer yer. At last I foun' er lamb dat wan't enjoyin' de best o' health. Powerful delicate thing—so weak he couldn't hardly stand. Yer see, I wanted a lamb lung he thought it would' live, an' he 'lowed dat it would; if de win' wuz favorable, an' dat it would n't live much longer, an'—what's de matter, lady, don' yer like de meat? Get rouin' dar, wife, an' bring de wil' sass. Reckon yer see how she's retchin' herself. Sorry dat it doan 'gree wid her. Joyfully Astonished.

Mr. James Broul, Deputy Sheriff, Baltimore, Maryland, writes: Having suffered thirty years I have become acquainted with numerous so-called specifics for coughs and colds, but never before experienced such promising efficacy as was obtained from the first dose than formerly. I was so relieved in a short time, and after a few days' use was entirely well and cured. I suffered for some time, and tried this valuable remedy. It was completely cured by the use of one bottle.

Adulterations.

DR. JOHN BELL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FOR THE CURE OF
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and Scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

LAST HOURS OF GREAT MEN.

Anecdotes of the Last Days of John Randolph, Jackson and Jefferson.

The last days of John Randolph, of Roanoke, are full of pathos. He thought he was dying for years before he did so, and when he was asked how he was he would reply "Dying! dying! dying!" Once when he was at Washington he was very low, and his friends in congress thought he could not live but a few hours. At one time they left him for a while when he seemed a little better than usual, and went to the capitol. They had been gone but a short time when Randolph burst into the senate and made a fiery speech, which he supposed would be his last. At another time he came out of his sick chamber into the senate to hear Clay speak, and shook hands with him at the close, testifying his friendship for him, notwithstanding the duel which they had formerly fought. Randolph was insane during a part of his life, and an opium-eater during his last days. He was tyrannical and dictatorial until the last, and he fought with his doctor on his death-bed over the pronunciation of certain words. His death occurred in a Philadelphia hotel. A few minutes before he died the doctor wanted to leave him, but Randolph objected, and his slave took the key, locked the door, and put the key in his pocket. With his last words Randolph declared that he wanted his slave set free, and he kept the doctor there as a witness of his dying declaration. A skeptic through life, he appreciated his condition on his death-bed, and among his last words were "remorse." He was lying perfectly quiet, with his eyes closed, when he suddenly roused up, and screamed out in an agitated voice, "Remorse! remorse! remorse!" He then cried out, "Let me see the word! Get a dictionary! Let me see the word!"

There was no dictionary at hand, and he was told so. He exclaimed: "Write it then! Let me see the word!" The doctor picked up one of his cards labeled "Randolph of Roanoke." "Shall I write it on this?" "Yes; nothing more proper," was Randolph's reply. The word remorse was written on it in pencil and handed to him. He looked at it a moment with great intensity, "Write it on the back," he exclaimed. It was done, and handed him again. He looked at it with his blazing eyes. "Remorse!" he said, "even on knave no idea of it whatever; it has brought me to my present situation—but I have looked to Jesus Christ and I hope to obtain pardon." He then asked the doctor to draw a line under the word and told him to keep the card. A short time after this he became very low, and his powerful mind to give way, and within two hours he died. His body was taken to Virginia and buried on his estate at Roanoke.

In a late letter I told you something of the last days of the presidents, but I omitted to say much as to their deaths. We have preserved the last words of some of them. John Adams and Thomas Jefferson both died on the same day, and that the 4th of July, 1826. They were friends during their latter years, and Adams' last words were, "Thomas Jefferson still lives," but history shows that he was mistaken. Jefferson died an hour before, exclaiming: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," and "I sign my name to the Declaration of Independence to my country." John Quincy Adams gave his last breath in the capitol at Washington, saying: "This is the end of earth. I am content," and Gen. Harrison, who died in the white house, said: "Sir, I wish you to understand the principles of government. I wish them carried out. I ask nothing more."

Garfield's last reported words, as he lay racked by his terrible wound, were, "Oh, that pain!" But Lincoln became unconscious as he lay in his box, and remained so till he died. George Washington was sane during his last hours, and he spent them in calmly arranging his affairs. He told his wife to bring two wills which he had made, and to burn one on them. He then grasped his pulse with one hand and counted the beats until he dropped back dead. Washington died of a cold. Nine of the cholera, Andrew Johnson of paralysis, and Gen. Harrison of cold, pleurisy, and cholera morbus.

President Jackson was for thirty-one years a diseased man, and the latter part of his life was spent in almost constant pain. Even on his death-bed he was tortured by officeseekers. "I am dying," said he, "as fast as I can, and they all know it; but they keep swarming about me in crowds, seeking for office—intriguing for office." His death-bed scene was a most affecting one. A halt an hour before his death his children and friends were standing around his bedside, and his adopted son Andrew had taken his hand and whispered in his ear:

"Father, how do you feel? Do you know me?"

"Know you? Yes, I should know you all if I could see. Bring me my spectacles."

These were brought and put on him, and he said: "Where is my daughter and Marian? God will take care of you for me, I am my God's. I belong to him. I expect but a few time before you, and I want to meet you all, white and black, in heaven."

At this all gave way to tears, and the general said: "What is the matter with you, my dear children? Have I alarmed you? Oh, do not. He is our children, and we will all meet in heaven."

These were Jackson's last words. A short time after this he raised upon his elbows, looked at Christ and a peaceful expression came over his face, and he died.

The last days of Jefferson were of a different character, and a few hours before he died he raised upon his elbows and looked around him, and said he should be glad to see a clergyman whose mind was a good deal like his own. It was interesting that he did not care to see him professionally. There was no preacher present at Washington's death-bed, and there is doubt as to his belief. The two Adamses believed in Unitarian doctrines, and it is said that John Quincy Adams, during his last years, never went to sleep without repeating that little child's prayer:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

There is considerable doubt as to Lincoln's Christianity, but his best friends believe him to have been a believer. He was certainly a great Bible reader, and understood it thoroughly. Frank Pierce was an episcopalian and a church member; Gens. Grant and Hayes attended the Methodist church while in the white house, and Garfield spent his Sundays at the chapel of the Disciples. John Tyler was, I think, a Presbyterian, though his second wife was a Catholic. Dolly Madison was an Episcopalian, whatever her husband may have been, and the old church which she attended years ago still stands, and in it President Arthur worships to-day.—Cor. Cleveland Herald.

How the Canny Scot Invests.

"The canny Scot would have an investment company for mortgages at the north pole or at the head of the Congo river, if he found productive property there," said a representative of a Scotch syndicate, who handles millions of money annually in this country. "The Scotch frugality is encouraged by the proverb, 'The borrower ye always have with you,' and the interest rates of this country, especially of the south and west, present such an attractive field for investment that there is no other line of business of equal security that presents the same opportunity for profit. The Scotch were the first to recognize the revival of industry in the south, and in the past five years they have invested millions there upon realistic mortgages, always on the country. They believe in soil, not in bricks and mortar. An applicant for a city loan some time ago was told by a Scotch agent that all he could have was 30 per cent on the value of the ground on which his building stood. He protested that his building was worth five times as much as the land, and was insured in a first-class company. 'Ah,' answered the Scot, 'your building may burn to-night and the insurance company may fail to-morrow—then where would any security be?' This was conservatism with a vengeance, and when the applicant expressed his disgust, the Scotchman said: 'Ah, weel, we dinna coom to America to lose our money.'

"Few investments have proved so fortunate for the Scotchmen as the mortgage upon southern farms. They organize an investment company on the other side with an authorized capital of $500,000, 20 per cent of which they pay in. Only first-class people, whose names invite confidence, are taken into this company, which, under the limited liability act, goes before the public with debentures bearing 3½ or 4 per cent interest, which they have authority to issue up to the limit of their authorized capital. They get $100,000 there very cheap, and they loan it out in the south and west at 10 per cent, and have the power paying all expenses and commissions."

"What security is required?"

"Productive lands under cultivation. The loan is based upon about 40 per cent of a conservative valuation in estimating which no account is made of improvements, fences, houses, or timber land, but for the greater security of all these are taken in. The borrower gives a deed of trust, and this is put on record before he receives the money. Then upon the final certificate of the attorney is received all debts against the property are first paid from the amount of the loan, and the remainder is handed over to the borrower.

"What does the investor get as his evidence?"

"A neat little packet of 10 per cent notes, signed by the borrowers in the presence of witnesses, and these represent the interest as it becomes due, and the principal is represented by a series of notes of equal amount, one of which must be paid each year. The Scotchman's theory is that if you want a high rate of interest it is better to have the principal paid in installments, and that the borrower finds it easier to pay a fixed amount a year than to keep the accumulations intact for the maturity of the loan. The notes are collected by the agent of the investment company. The methods employed are so careful that in a large business involving millions there has not yet been a foreclosure. The investment companies, after paying 1 per cent upon their debentures, have 6 per cent or $60,000 to add to dividends to the 10 per cent which the subscribed capital itself is drawing. It is as slick a business as man ever devised, and while the Englishman is are fussing with our railroads the keener Scotchman seethes the farms of the country are the true basis of value, and they act accordingly."—New York Sun.

Sara Bernhardt's gorgeous imperial mantle, worn in Sardou's new play, "Theodora," is the talk of the hour in Paris. Duplicates of it have been ordered, which was said to be worth $60,000, the modern magnificent $1,000 and seventeen copied from the famous mosaic portrait of the Empress of Ravenna. It is made in blue satin, bordered with gold and sown with pearl necks having sapphire and emerald pendants and ruby eyes, and is worn by Theodora when visiting the hippodrome in state.

Baked beans have been found in Worcester, Mass., at a depth of 1,021 feet, thus clearly showing that Boston can no longer be known as the "bean city" of the world.

An Iowa Docberry.

The new Attorney-General of Iowa tells the following of his first case in court. It was an action for damages on a warranty in a horse trade. He was attorney for the plaintiff. The trial was before "a well-known" settler, and "Esquire" in pioneer days, called "Dickie Miller." The defendant's attorney was a sprucy young fellow, who will be known as "Jim," but we will let the story go as Baker related it:

"I had but two law books in my office, the Code of Iowa and "Chitty on Contracts." In "Chitty" I found a case which covered exactly the points I wanted to make in my horse case, so I took the hook along. "Dickie," the Esquire, and the defendant's lawyer came into the room together, and, as they did so, I saw a large bottle sticking out of "Jim's" pocket. In those days whisky was free as water, and did not cost as much as it does now. The trial was begun, and every little while Jim would go out behind the house, and in a moment after "Dickie" would follow. The testimony was put in and I made my argument, with several interruptions while Jim and "Dickie" went outside. I cited Chitty for all he was worth, for by this time "Dickie" had got a little "tired." When I closed Jim straightened himself up, expectorated the superfluous "eotton," and picking up the volume of "Chitty," turned to the court, and said:

"Yer Honor, what kind of law is this fellow giving us? I supposed the courts of Iowa were ruled by the code of Iowa, but this fellow says not. He says somebody out in England makes the laws for Iowa and for Yer Honor. Let's see who it is [reading the title page] 'Robert Chitty, Barrister-at-law? I've heard of attorneys-at-law, but what's a barrister-at-law—yes, barrister-at-law; to make laws for courts in Iowa; for Yer Honor; let's see further who this Iowa law maker is England gypsies, always on the country. They believe in soil, not in bricks and mortar. A PRIZE. Send 50c. cents for postage and receive free a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. Fortunes await the workers. Before these were unknown to the first family. Mr. Haskin supported the poor woman and her children for years, while he fought the case to the court of appeals against John H. Anthon, backed by the children of his first wife. Of course Mr. Haskin was paid handsomely out of the estate which he recovered for the widow.

"Many large corporations have salaried lawyers to look after their business. Judge Dillon left the bench of the United States court to take a salary of $20,000 from the Union Pacific Railway company. Dudley Field has had enormous fees out of the Erie Railway company and the elevated railways. The lawyers saved the elevated railways about $1,250,000 in the tax suits with the city, as the courts cut down the bills about that sum.

"The counsel for large corporations like Trinity church, the Equitable and Mutual Life, the Standard Oil company, and institutions of like magnitude receive handsome incomes, and devote themselves largely to the business of one client.

"Lawyers like Ben Butler, Roscoe Conkling, Senator Edmunds, or Judge Jere Black could fill volumes of records of big fees. There is, in fact, always a demand for lawyers who can earn big fees. There are so many novelties of the law, so many expedients and devices to suit new circumstances, that men of penetration and of skill in devious expedients can find plenty of scope.

"An Indiana railroad company once employed Gen. Foster to draw up a contract for them. He drew it on one sheet of paper and charged $250. The company paid and growled. He told them to try a certain high-priced lawyer the next time. They did so. The other lawyer sent around and borrowed the copy of the old contract from George, turned in a neatly engrossed sheet, and charged $2,500. But the company felt satisfied they had a contract that would hold water.

"In the old days of alliances out of estates by the surrogate a lot of lawyers who had been retained in a will case, but had nothing to do because of the agreement of the frightened litigants, met in the surrogate's office to have their allowances settled. The surrogate permitted the lawyers to settle it among themselves. The gentlemen of the bar agreed to parcel out a very large slice of the estate, each one being most liberal to his learned brother While this was going on the stenographer of the court, who was a great wag, handed up a bill to the court for $1,200.

"Why, you have not written a word in this case," said the surrogate.

"'I know it,' was the bland reply.

"'Then how do you claim this $1,200?' inquired the surrogate.

"'For as much right to it as the lawyers,' was the reply. But the surrogate said he would not allow the estate to be plucked."

In the Rollwagon will case Henry L. Clinton got an allowance of $15,000 Mr. Armory, $10,000; Malcomb Campbell, $2,500; George and J. C. Longbell, $750; each. In the Vanderbilt will case Judge Jeremiah Black had one check from Mrs. La Ban for $15,500, and other fees during the trial, and Scott Lord had some large fees. Mr. Joseph H. Choate came in for a big fee on the other side.

The big fees of receivers and their lawyers have attracted much recent legislation, and the enormous sums paid in this direction will not hereafter be repeated. There are several cases on record where receivers have received fortunes for merely nominal work.—New York Sun.

Dreams.

The last years' leaves have fallen, and I tread
Their withered mantle shrouding field and hill,
While memory speaks of former seasons dead,
And recalls which once the pulse of youth did thrill.
The coldstone sweetness of the past is fled,
And youth no more by golden fancies led.
Old visions stir the soul and haunt the brain,
As through these forest aisles we take our way;
The same to older eyes, yet not the same—
Life's moon has changed to mountide cold and gray.
But nature still a lesson here can teach,
And chastes and sublime the sterner will:
Make glad the heart, discreet the vain-blown speech,
With purest joy the empty bosom fill.

The world grows colder. Selfish, narrow, mean,
Are human hearts, that wake not to the moan
Of the distress'd; Oh, for a rest, a home,
Hath been the cry of those whom love hath seen
Fettered in narrow lines and dismal rooms,
Where God's pure sunlight hit in patches deeds;
While grief and want its tale of misery tell,
And virtue unregarded lives and blooms.
For here ar- forms and faces learns can love,
Now pinched and wan with penury and woe.
Go, pity, love, thy sacred mantles throw
O'er them, and charity abundance give; above
The clamor of a noisy world shall rise
Reward and praise, ascending to the skies.
—Samuel Baxter Foster.

The Illinois Legislature held a joint session on Tuesday, Feb. 12, to vote for United States Senator. No one answered the call of the roll, including the presiding officer of the Senate (including the proposition of general legislation upon individuals). Finally a motion was made to adjourn. The Senate gave its concurrence to the motion, but the House refused to be bound by the unlawful decisions of public bodies. The Senate, in its turn, refused to be bound by the decision of William L. Curtis to be sergeant-at-arms of the Senate. The President of the Senate put the following nominations to the Senate: John R. Buchanan, for Collector of Customs for the district of Galveston, Texas; John M. Harlan, of Kentucky, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court; Edward J. Curtis, of Idaho, Secretary of Idaho; Edward Kemble, of Idaho, Marshal of the United States for the district of Nebraska. The House of Representatives refused to receive the nominees of the whole on the river and harbor bill, and the Senate refused to receive the same, and at midnight to forbid the repair of printing-press and type. The Senate, however, then probably killed the measure by refusing to act on the nominations. Mr. Morrison then called attention to the fact that but one session day remained in which to pass appropriation bills, and only one of the thirteen general appropriation bills had been passed. Of the remaining twelve bills and amendments pending in the House, all but three or four originated with the Committee on Appropriations, and many wished on him in the interest of candidates for Cabinet positions. Q. C. Lamar, Secretary of Interior, and Senator Jones, of Louisiana, Postmaster-General.

Does not Security Aid Prompt-ness?

Someone has contributed an article in the Banker's Magazine, who among other good things gets off the following: "When money in quantity can be had by the simple process of writing out a promissory note, without any necessity to pledge security or to ask a personal guarantor, or even to make explanations to the lender, it is scarcely in human nature to use money so obtained economically and carefully. And the want of economy and care introduced into business on a large scale can have but one result. There is many a poverty stricken man to day "floating" about our cities in enforced idleness, who in all probability would have been on his feet had he not been able to borrow money so easily. The best friend that a borrower can have, is a lender who is careful of the amount he parts with and the security he lends upon.

With respect to loans without security which are negotinted in a legitimate way, there is a vast amount of false pride about in the community. Some people think that a sort of slight is inflicted upon them when they are asked for security, forgetting that the very act of borrowing puts them upon a dependent footing. The true pride in the case is that of a very rich mercantile firm, whom I once knew well. On the rare occasions when they found it necessary to borrow, it was their pride to be able to put down government securities as collateral. They were too proud to ask the banker to lend them money as a personal favor—a form of pride which might be imitated with advantage by many people whose vanity is greater than their means."

From the office of the Detroit Evening News we have received a circular containing a reduced fac simile of the first page of the paper, a portrait of its founder, Mr. J. E. Scripps, and a sworn statement of its circulation for each day of the year 1884. Nearly twelve and a half million papers were sold during the year, a daily average of over thirty-nine thousand. The News evidently stands at the top in the estimation of the people of Michigan.

There is just one thing lacking in the Detroit Evening Journal to make it a model of typographic neatness (the style of heading). Recent improvements in make-up place it in the van. Since last election it has dropped some of its partisan features, and is more nearly what it purports to be, an independent newspaper. Although a partly to one of the most hotly contested newspaper fights we ever know, it shows no signs of weakening, but fills its columns every day with live, readable, condensed news, so arranged that each department can be found without delay.

The Hampton sensation and investigation seems to have subsided. Chairman Campbell says that he is only waiting developments. But the friends of Mr. Hampton are confident in their assertions that nothing will ever come of it. It is evident that the question to which Mr. Egan arose was not one of privilege and should not have been recognized as such, by the speaker. President Buttars, of the senate, dealt very summarily with Jay Hubbell's alleged question of privilege. The libel suit which Mr. Egan threatened, in the absence of a legislative investigation, is being awaited. Doubtless his question of privilege will not soon be heard from.—[Detroit Journal.

ARAB LOVE SONG.

BY SYDNEY HERBERT PIERSON.

The love lies glitter in the sky,
The earth is filled with dreamy light,
O, cease to me, for I am sick!
Oh, come to me, my soul's delight!

The earth is filled with dreamy light,
The night wind scatters odors sweet,
Oh, come to me, my soul's delight!
Lo! I am waiting at the feet!

The night wind scatters odors sweet,
It wakes the slumber-laden flowers,
Lo! I am waiting at the feet—
Oh, leave Thy anxious-winged lovers!

It wakes the slumber-laden flowers,
The nightingale breaks forth in song,
Oh, leave thy anxious-winged lovers!
My heart, why tarriest thou so long?

The nightingale breaks forth in song,
The rose sways above the gate,
My heart, why tarriest thou so long?
When they awake will then still wait?

The rose sways above the gate,
Thy sister is coming, red and white,
When they awake will then still wait?
Oh, come to me, my soul's delight!

No Murderer.

BY LILY M. CLEVE.

"You will leave trouble set with that fellow," said Tom, hortatively.

I shook the ashes from my cigar—a first-class article which one might have enjoyed under almost any circumstances. Then I answered, slowly:

"I've no doubt of it."

Of course I agreed with Tom; he said been in that region before and knew the ways of the inhabitants.

But Tom had ceased smoking, and was looking grave.

"You will leave trouble," he repeated. "I hate to leave you here, Jack."

"Bah!" I laughed. "Haven't I a pair of six-shooters in my trunk there?"

"Get them out of your trunk," he suggested. "Keep them handy."

"And I am a pretty good shot, don't you think?"

"In a shooting-gallery, up home. It is different when somebody gets the drop on you."

We were silent for a time; Tom appeared contemplative. I imagined his best thoughts were "up home," just at that moment, where a certain fair face awaited his return. In any event, he was not in love with Texas.

We had come South a few weeks previous as promoters of a new railroad. We were temporarily located in a small town half-way between the Brazos and the Colorado, and not far from the capital. Here we had fitted up as our office and bachelor apartments a couple of pleasant rooms in the second story of a new brick building a short distance from the railroad station, and as yet no tragedy had befallen it.

But Tom's surname Phillips, mine Lester), my closest friend, my comrade in business and pleasure, was actually in all at once. He was going to Austin the following morning to remain several days, leaving me at home to manage all affairs and generally to do the decorations of the corporation.

So far, well and good. But I, on my part, had been unfortunate enough that very afternoon to incur the displeasure of a certain fiery tempered native, who was said to shoot with as few compunctions as he would feed his cat his dinner—or something of the sort. The native, "Major" Dawson by name, had been a customer for some time to furnish us, at—as he claimed—the lowest figure, with such supplies—mules for one thing—as we should shortly need for actual work in opening up our new road. We had concluded to buy of him; the trade had all but been completed, when, by purest chance, I had discovered that he was going to swindle us unmercifully. Without pausing to consult Tom, who happened to be absent, I had sent down to Dawson's store, a few squares distant, asking him to come up at once. And when he had appeared I had confronted him with my knowledge of his intentions. Of course he denied it up and down, but I had the proofs, and was not to be deceived.

"It is no matter," I had said; "you may count the trade off. We don't propose to be cheated."

He had sprung to his feet, making a quick motion, as if to draw some weapon. Then suddenly he had seemed to reconsider. With an oath and a threat that we should not get out of it so easily, he had left the place.

It was now evening, and Tom having returned, I had been telling him the circumstances.

"Suppose," he said, presently, "suppose you go to Austin. I've heard a good deal about Dawson. They say he's quick on the trigger," you know, and he couldn't very well kill you if you weren't here."

"S'e'nsy," I replied. "What kind of a fellow do you think me, any way? Make room, and leave you to settle the scrape? Not much. I'll stay at home as usual to-morrow, and if he comes around I'll talk with people who know how to behave."

I left my door later. I met the "Major" on the main street of the town. He was in company of the sheriff and several others. I passed on, and looked back to see them all standing and conversing together. I was not in a humor for words or for "talk" of any kind, and I was glad that they had not seen fit to address me.

I was amused with a device to laugh, then in which the door opened, any it seemed so absurd. But I knew that would only aggravate matters.

"I've no time to argue," I said, "You might as well let the matter drop. I don't propose to quarrel with you; I'm not killing people just now; I'm no murderer."

I went home then.

Somehow I felt strangely lonesome when evening had come, and I went off alone to the hotel where Tom and I took our meals.

As I sat eating my supper, a dispatch was brought from Tom asking me to follow by the first train, my presence in Austin being highly important.

Before leaving the hotel, I made some inquiries, and found, as I had thought, there was an accommodation due at 10 o'clock, or a few minutes later. I determined to take this, not wait until the following morning.

As I left the office, I met the fiery "Major" just entering. He glared at me like a wild beast. I could hardly understand any one's working up such a state of deadly hatred on such short notice. Nevertheless, it was quite apparent how he felt.

I went home and put together some papers to take with me, placing all others of importance carefully in my trunk. To tell the truth, I was beginning to feel rebellious at getting away from the town for fear of war. As Tom had intimated, my shooting had always been done at wooden targets, and I had a horrid, indescribable sensation at the thought of blood-shed. I really hoped my adversary would grow cool in my absence and see the folly of his ways. He was in a measure formidable. He was tall and sinewy, quick of sight and motion. In anger his face assumed an expression of unfeeling ferocity easier to remember than describe. He was, however, a man of certain strength of purpose, possessed of some little property and influence. I had heard somewhat of the way of that country, and knew enough of the way to administer a good dose of cold lead to a stranger like myself, deliver himself up to some friendly Justice of the Peace, and be instantly acquitted on grounds of self-defense. I lowered the curtains of my windows, and, lighting the lamp, arranged a few articles to take on my journey. I felt a little nervous and a good deal angry. I remembered that some of the people over at the hotel had looked at me with curious interest. Like as not they were expecting a murder, and were eager to do me harm. I had a strange, morbid suspicion it was so—a suspicion which rapidly increased to certain knowledge.

"Tom shall eat your words or die." I could hear him threatening it again, and the thought was a chilly sort of comfort, I confess.

What he wanted of the horse in waiting for, I could hardly comprehend, unless it was to escape, when once he had "settled" me.

I drew in my head and closed the window. I listened again; for again had come that creaking sound of stealthy footsteps.

I went and got one of my pistols, saw that it was all right, and, holding it firmly, opened the door into the hall. This time quite suddenly.

No one in sight!

I peered, however, that the door of one of the little closets was slightly ajar. It was the closet on the opposite side of the hall, facing to the street.

one hiding in the closet could not see me through the aperture, so that I was safe enough.

I closed my door softly, and proceeded, revolver in hand, to the closet on my own side, but the door was shut fast, and I concluded not to turn my back to the possible locality of the enemy.

I paused to consider. Here was a comfortable prospect. I should have to postpone my departure from town until the following morning.

I heard the accommodation thunder ponderously into the town. I backed slowly up to my own door, reached one hand behind for the knob, when suddenly I felt a grand disgust at my own cowardice, a reckless desire to investigate that opposite closet.

I sprang forward with three long strides, snatched the door open, and fell against—Dawson!

I was quick enough to knock his weapon out of his hand.

Then we grappled.

In the struggle that followed we rolled out and over and over on the floor of the hall.

He was desperately vicious; I was viciously desperate. We choked and pounded one another for an indefinite space. Strangely enough, we made but little noise.

I gained upon him, and presently was holding him down, with a firm grip at his throat. I knew it would not do to let him go; it did not occur to me to call for assistance. I only kept on thumping him soundly, regardless of consequences.

"You coward!" I said, or thought. "Provoking sound after dark! You hadn't the courage to meet me by daylight, fair and square. I've a mind to thrash the life out of you!"

I lost a little of my grip on him then, and he struggled to his feet, mighty and more furious than ever. He began to back me along the hall toward the stairs, intending, I could see, to throw me into the street. But I too could play at that, I was quite sure. I let him feel me weakening in his grasp, until we were just at the head of the staircase. Then I wheeled suddenly, and he himself went over with all the force he had meant to thrust upon me.

Over he went, but, alas! he clutched at and dragged me with him.

It was a terrible fall. I was stunned for a moment; then I felt a horrible pain in my arm. I picked myself up as best I could, and took a brief survey of my enemy—my fallen enemy—silent and motionless I entered the store, aroused the sleeping proprietor, and told my story.

And Dawson? O, no, he was not killed. It takes a deal to kill some men. He was taken to his home, and I long before he was able to leave his house again, Tom and I had decided that headquarters should be further down toward the Gulf.

However, I sent the "Major" his revolver, with my compliments, and the hope that he would be more careful in future.

The Birthplace of Great Southerners.

A nicely worded paragraph is going the rounds of the press under the title of "Henry Clay's Birthplace," to the effect it Ashland, Ky., and treats it with pathos and feeling. The fact is, Henry Clay was not born in Kentucky at all. He was a Virginia boy, who first saw the light in Hanover County, and did not remain in Kentucky quite long enough to vote. The greatest men of both Kentucky and Tennessee have been born in other States. Jos Ha den, the orator of Kentucky, was born in Pennsylvania; George M. Bibb, Tyler's Secretary of the Treasury, was born in Virginia; and Henry Watterson, of the Courier-Journal, first saw light in Washington, D. C. As to Tennessee, she has produced quite enough. Before the war it had hardly a man of national prominence who had been born within its borders. Polk, Jackson, Grundy and Johnson were born in North Carolina, as was also J. K. Polk and H. L. Pope, and I had a horrid, indescribable sensation at the thought of blood-shed. I really hoped my adversary would grow cool in my absence and see the folly of his ways. He was in a measure formidable. He was tall and sinewy, quick of sight and motion. In anger his face assumed an expression of unfeeling ferocity easier to remember than describe. I gained upon him, and presently was holding him down, with a firm grip at his throat. I knew it would not do to let him go; it did not occur to me to call for assistance. I only kept on thumping him soundly, regardless of consequences.

"You coward!" I said, or thought. "Provoking sound after dark! You hadn't the courage to meet me by daylight, fair and square. I've a mind to thrash the life out of you!"

I lost a little of my grip on him then, and he struggled to his feet, mighty and more furious than ever. He began to back me along the hall toward the stairs, intending, I could see, to throw me into the street. But I too could play at that, I was quite sure. I let him feel me weakening in his grasp, until we were just at the head of the staircase. Then I wheeled suddenly, and he himself went over with all the force he had meant to thrust upon me.

Over he went, but, alas! he clutched at and dragged me with him.

It was a terrible fall. I was stunned for a moment; then I felt a horrible pain in my arm. I picked myself up as best I could, and took a brief survey of my enemy—my fallen enemy—silent and motionless I entered the store, aroused the sleeping proprietor, and told my story.

And Dawson? O, no, he was not killed. It takes a deal to kill some men. He was taken to his home, and I long before he was able to leave his house again, Tom and I had decided that headquarters should be further down toward the Gulf.

However, I sent the "Major" his revolver, with my compliments, and the hope that he would be more careful in future.

The Birthplace of Great Southerners.

A nicely worded paragraph is going the rounds of the press under the title of "Henry Clay's Birthplace," to the effect it Ashland, Ky., and treats it with pathos and feeling. The fact is, Henry Clay was not born in Kentucky at all. He was a Virginia boy, who first saw the light in Hanover County, and did not remain in Kentucky quite long enough to vote. The greatest men of both Kentucky and Tennessee have been born in other States. Jos Ha den, the orator of Kentucky, was born in Pennsylvania; George M. Bibb, Tyler's Secretary of the Treasury, was born in Virginia; and Henry Watterson, of the Courier-Journal, first saw light in Washington, D. C. As to Tennessee, she has produced quite enough. Before the war it had hardly a man of national prominence who had been born within its borders. Polk, Jackson, Grundy and Johnson were born in North Carolina, as was also J. K. Polk and H. L. Pope, and I had a horrid, indescribable sensation at the thought of blood-shed. I really hoped my adversary would grow cool in my absence and see the folly of his ways. He was in a measure formidable. He was tall and sinewy, quick of sight and motion. In anger his face assumed an expression of unfeeling ferocity easier to remember than describe. He was, however, a man of certain strength of purpose, possessed of some little property and influence. I had heard somewhat of the way of that country, and knew enough of the way to administer a good dose of cold lead to a stranger like myself, deliver himself up to some friendly Justice of the Peace, and be instantly acquitted on grounds of self-defense. I lowered the curtains of my windows, and, lighting the lamp, arranged a few articles to take on my journey. I felt a little nervous and a good deal angry. I remembered that some of the people over at the hotel had looked at me with curious interest. Like as not they were expecting a murder, and were eager to do me harm. I had a strange, morbid suspicion it was so—a suspicion which rapidly increased to certain knowledge.

"Tom shall eat your words or die." I could hear him threatening it again, and the thought was a chilly sort of comfort, I confess.

What he wanted of the horse in waiting for, I could hardly comprehend, unless it was to escape, when once he had "settled" me.

I drew in my head and closed the window. I listened again; for again had come that creaking sound of stealthy footsteps.

I went and got one of my pistols, saw that it was all right, and, holding it firmly, opened the door into the hall. This time quite suddenly.

No one in sight!

I peered, however, that the door of one of the little closets was slightly ajar. It was the closet on the opposite side of the hall, facing to the street.

THE SAGE OF DEERFIELD.

Horatio Seymour's Estimate of President Cleveland and the Work Awaiting Him

(Albany Cor. New York Herald.)

Your correspondent recently met Col. Dunlap in Albany. He was on his way home from Utica, where he had been and conversed a long time with ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour. He represents the Sage of Deerfield, who has now passed his seventy-fifth birthday, as somewhat oppressed by the weight of years, but upon the whole enjoys good average health and spirits. His mind is as clear as ever, and he still possesses that graceful flow of conversation and aptness of expression which have made him through life so trusted as a monitor and so cherished as a friend. The men of his generation have almost all passed away; his early companions and rivals alike exist only in memory and in the record of their acts, and the venerable ex-Governor, in his charming but modest country house, sits calmly and expectantly awaiting the summons to follow them. He is thankful that he has been spared to see the final triumph of the Democratic party in the late Presidential election, and expresses entire confidence in Mr. Cleveland and his policy.

CLEVELAND A DRIFT AND SAFE MAN.

"What," I asked, "do you think of the general idea of the President elect?"

"He looks upon Mr. Cleveland as a big, brainy man, conservative in his opinions and likely to be found equal to any emergency. If force and discretion be exercised in the important point of selecting his Cabinet, his administration will be not only a successful one, but a brilliant one. Mr. Seymour, however, fears that too much will be expected of the President at the outset of his official term, and some disappointment may be expected from the impossibility of making radical changes immediately. It will take time to assimilate the entire civil force of the country to the views and designs of the new regime. This, however, will be facilitated by the remit of the investigations which must be made into the doings of the Republican officials who have held power so long.

A GRAND WORK FOR THE DEMOCRACY.

"Irregularities of every nature may be expected to be found in every branch of the public service, and in some matters the corruption has run rampant. When the books are overhauled, as they must be, such wrong doing as may be found will be punished by the removal of the wrong doers. The public, remarked Mr. Seymour, must be made to realize that we have a clean Government. In harmony with this purpose, the civil law must be respected. It is Mr. Seymour's opinion that the opportunity is now open to the Democratic party to identify it effectively with the future of this country, to direct its destinies, and to carry out the principles of self-government in the transitions of its great leaders. They have a grand work before them.

Mr. Cleveland's policy in requesting the presence of gentlemen of such wide difference of views as Hendricks and Randall are supposed to represent, is a wise one, designed to allay as much as possible early in the season all hostility on the great questions of the average Illinois editor. He could not have brought together a power in Cleveland camp.—Indianapolis Sentinel, 27th.

Enoch McCune, who is traveling through the South, declares that the Democratic victory on that ground is the result of no changes in political sentiment. Nothing else could have more fully shown the political independence of the blacks.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

Supposed Commotion Caused by That Remarkable Statement of a Physician.

Interest published in these columns recently from the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat, has a deal of comment here as it has elsewhere, the same paper shows:

Dr. [illegible] who is well known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of the State, on an extended art, ele to this city a few days ago, which was duly published, giving his remarkable experience and stating what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the people in private which have been made at our office of the validity of the article, but we have been so numerous that further inquiries of the subject was deemed an unnecessity.

In this out in view a representative of the paper called on Dr. Benton at his residence on Andrews street, when the following facts were secured: That a boy of young Mr. Benton was created quite a whirlwind. After expenses of officers while taking testimonials about the terrible condition of affairs there, and the way you were rescued, you can easily understand.

The Indigent Widow and Her Piano.

A clerk in the counting-room of a prominent New York paper told me of an ingenious scheme, which I imagine has never been exposed. A res ectably dressed and prosperous-looking woman came into the office as if she owned it, and was rather proud of the fact, slammed down an advertisement with the requisite change on the counter, and smiled affably across the clerk. "Still another?" asked the clerk, brightly. "Still another," repeated the woman. "This time it's a beauty, too. Come to me, you know, when you want one." She smiled again and drifted out of the room. "For three years," said the clerk, "that woman has had an advertisement in the paper every day, announcing that she has for sale either her residence a piano which will go at a bargain. The advertisement invariably states that the instrument has only been in use a week, and is in every respect as good as new, but that sudden reverses in fortune and a decision to move out of town force the owner to sell at once. I thought for the first five or six weeks that her ladyship was having a hard time to sell her piano. Then I began to smell a mouse. The winter night she was obliged to wait here a long time for a car, and a talk I had her into a confession that she sold pianos in this way as a regular business. She has an arrangement with the manufacturers by which he furnishes her a fresh piano as soon as the last one is sold, and as they are all of cheap make, but rather showy, they manage to go off very well. She is anxious to keep her business very quiet, but it has been noised abroad, until she now has scores of admirers, and the Sunday papers will invariably have the names of four widows who are obliged to sell their pianos at once. Every one of them makes a good living by it."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Woman Who Works at Home.

I notice, says a Chicago lady, that in all of this talk about what is designated as women's labor the every-day routine work of the housekeeper is ignored. There is no reference to the work of the women who live in their own homes making and home-keeping. They are not considered as active workers. They are not placed on a level with more productive elves. Yet the profession of the housekeeper is regarded as the most natural and proper avocation of women. There is no other trade so complex. None more difficult. Add to this the cares of motherhood, and what else can a woman engage in which will so completely absorb every energy of which she is capable? To be a good housekeeper and mother is the highest accomplishment of an idler. Perhaps my notions are obsolete; but I think the woman who creates a comfortable home and rears children worthy manhood and womanhood is the noblest work of God, and is quite as much of a producer as the trade dynasties which in its presents some machine, or follows a profession.—Chicago News.

The Weather.

Lieut. Charles W. McKim, Portland, Ky., states: "For twenty years I suffered with rheumatism. During the last weather my suffering was terrible. I was about to give up. Some one suggested the application of St. Jacobs Oil. I tried it and its relief was rapid. In half an hour I could stand up. I no longer suffer with the pains."

Religious opposition to the custom of saluting people when they sneeze arose among the Anabaptists in the beginning of the last century. They declared it was a pagan custom and would have none of it among the faithful, yet a few years before that good and quaint old man Montaigne declared, "Let us give an honest welcome to this sort of wind, for it comes from the head and is blameless." Tradition has it when Cæsar was on the banks of the Rubicon he sneezed, and, regarding it as a favorable omen, crossed it, and the custom of Good Speed, Long Life, who have read Xenophon's Memorabilia of the career and habits of Socrates, remember that he claimed he was infested with a demon or spirit to whom he owed all his wisdom. Now, Plutarch says that the demon always sent his characteristic warnings by means of sneezes.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and Scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

How Guncotton is Made.

It is not generally known that there, but one place in the United States where guncotton is manufactured, to such is the case. This is at the torpedo station in Newport Harbor. In the manufacture of guncotton the best cotton waste and the strongest and purest nitric and sulphuric acids are used for the explosive. The cotton waste, after it has been handpicked for the purpose of removing the dirt and grit, is placed in boiling tanks, where it is allowed to remain for four hours. It is afterward subjected to a thorough washing and is redoiled. This operation removes all oily matter and leaves the cotton harsh and stiff. It is then dried in the rooms heated with the waste air from a drying box.

After undergoing this treatment the cotton rolls up into snarls and bunches, and in order that the acid may have a freer access to it it is passed through a shredder and converted into a fluffy state. It is afterward exposed in an air-tight box for several hours to a temperature of 200 degrees, which practically deprives it of all moisture. From the air-tight box it is removed to the dipping room, where there are iron troughs filled with one part nitric acid and two parts of sulphuric acid. Into these troughs the cotton is placed, one bundle at a time, and allowed to remain about ten minutes, long enough for it to be thoroughly soaked. The acid is hand-pressed from the cotton, which is then placed in covered earthen jars, where it remains twenty-four hours undergoing chemical transformation.

In view of the fact that much heat is evolved during the chemical reaction, it is found necessary to place the jars in pots and surround them with flowing water, which serves to keep them cool. The cotton is now nitrated and is practically gun cotton, but the acid, still mechanically held, must be wholly removed or it would be apt to quickly deteriorate and become extremely dangerous. The charges, therefore, are taken one by one and placed in an acid wringer and plunged into a large tub which is kept filled with running water, in which a large wheel is rapidly turned in order to subject the cotton to a thorough washing. This latter process is continued till no acid is perceptible to the taste. It is then subjected to a still further washing and boiling in an alkaline mixture, this being necessary to remove every trace of acid.

The cotton is now in long shreds and balls, which can be used or stored without danger, the processes of conversion and cleansing being completed, but for military use it must be put into a more compact form. For this purpose the gun cotton in charges of 500 pounds is thrown into a pulping tub, where, mixed with water, it is ground by steel cutters into a fine pulp. The grinding and breaking up of the cellular tissue of the cotton has made it more or less dirty, and it is necessary, therefore, to expose it to frequent washings in the poaching tubs, from which after treating it with lime water to make the moisture slightly alkaline it is drawn up into a large iron tank, where it is fed to the molds, which under a moderate pressure, press the water from the pulp and trim out cylinders of cotton about eight inches high and three and a half inches in diameter. These cylinders are then placed under a hydraulic press and exposed to a pressure of about 1,000 pounds to the square inch or about eight tons on each. The cylinders are pressed into hard cakes or disks, some two inches high and three and a half inches in diameter, with a specific gravity a little greater than water. They are then packed in boxes of fifty pounds each and kept in magazines for general use. Gun cotton is, from its great explosive power and the small quantity of ash attached to its shrinkage, superior to any other known explosive for naval warfare.—New York Graphic.

A Going to a Queer Place.

An eminent clergyman, traveling in the east, wrote home a letter in which he spoke of his journeyings of scripture and the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees. The typesetter, not very familiar with the Bible, printed the going as if it were going. We doubt if any of our readers ever saw where and about the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees has been pointed out, but that is often fictitious. National banks only secure their bills in circulation. Savings banks only secure their depositors beyond amount of stock taken, and that is often fictitious. All State Savings Banks or other State Banks offer no security for deposits beyond amount of stock held. Property held by law to protect our depositors. All Savings Banks are managed by men of character, and it is foolish and wilful for depositors to risk their money in an institution where it is foolish and wilful for depositors to risk their money in an institution where it is foolish and wilful for depositors to risk their money in an institution where

The trains remained on the side-tracks all night, waiting for orders to move, while the respective crews shook their fists and howled in their profanity. The next morning Brown was discharged.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Democratic Nominations.

For Justice of the Supreme Court,
ALLEN B. MORSE.

For Regent of the University,
CHARLES R. WHITMAN.
MOSES W. FIELD.

For Supreme Judge.

The gentleman whom the democratic convention held at Bay City on Wednesday selected to present to the people as the candidate of the combined opposition for the high and important office of Supreme Judge is Major Allen B. Morse, of Ionia. A better nomination could not have been made.

Major Morse needs no introduction to the people of the state. For the last ten years he has been recognized as one of the leaders of the Michigan democracy. Although a representative of the younger members of the party, by sheer force of his brilliant talents, splendid judgment, unsullied character, and unselfish devotion to the cause of democracy, he long since won a commanding position in the councils of the party. Thoroughly democratic in his principles, consistent in his political convictions, and bold and aggressive in his every presence, a thinker, he is pre-eminently a man of the people. No corporation has a claim on him, no corporation can possess a claim on him. He owes no engagement and acknowledges no fealty save principles of the utmost purity, which ever seem to animate his every mental force and power.

In recognizing the eminence of the Major, Mr. Morse has taken a very high standard. A man to locate he is the people's choice for one of the four judges of the Supreme Court, and the ability of a man to discharge the duties of that high office with honor to himself and credit to the state, is the only test which the democratic convention has applied to the candidates for the position. Major Morse will be elected by a handsome majority, and will honor the bench on which he will sit.

LAKE WORTH, FLA., Feb. 16, 1885.

Editor Journal:

Dear Sir—Having a little leisure time, I will write you a few lines concerning this part of Florida. Lake Worth is a body of water about seven miles long and from one to two miles wide, and is separated from the ocean by a narrow strip of land. At present the only way to reach the lake is by steamer from Jupiter, a small town on the Indian river, about twenty miles north of here. The steamer leaves Jupiter every morning, and returns in the afternoon. The fare is $1 each way. The boat is a small one, and is usually crowded with passengers. The trip is a very pleasant one, and affords a fine view of the country. The boat stops at Lake Worth station, where there is a small store and post office. Here the passengers are landed in small boats, and rowed to the shore. The water is very shallow, and the boat cannot get near the shore. The lake is full of fish, and the fishing is very good. Fish are caught in large numbers, and are very plentiful in the market. Mullet, pompano, sheepshead, and red snapper are the principal varieties. Oysters are found in the lake, but are not plentiful. Turtle are also found in the lake, and are very fine eating. Deer are plentiful in the woods, and are frequently seen by the hunters. Wild turkeys are also found in the woods, but are very shy. WOMAN GOSSIP.

A New Maid of Athens.

Maid of Athens, we must part,
I hear your father dog-hood cart;
He's broken of his midnight rest;
Discretion on my part is best;
I'd better git.

Maid of Athens, I must go,
Kiss me once, for luck you know;
Your tather's foot is on the stair
None but the brave deserve the fair—
The one also I hit.

Maid of Athens, just once more—
Little ships must limp the shore;
Hark! the dog has broken his chain.
Zounds! I am in hard luck again—
Great Scot! I'm hit.

Digestible Biscuits.

Mr. Minks—"Ah, my dear fellow, allow me to congratulate you! Been married almost a month, haven't you?" Mr. Pink—"Over a month." "Has your love stood the test of matrimony?" "Perfectly." "Sure of it, eh?" "Could not be more so. We had biscuits for dinner yesterday." "Did wifey make them?" "Yes." "And you ate them?" "Yes." "Without a murmur?" "Without a murmur." "Happy man!"—Auburn News.

Woman as an Artist.

Is there any reason for supposing that among the sex who has made the best ward pictures of the age or of any age preceding there should not be found those who can put their ideas into pictures, and thus prove their superiority? I say no.

I say, moreover, that neither Raphael nor Rembrandt nor Meissonier ever had it in them to translate through brush and pencil our lovely little men and women of the nursery to our deep and thorough and loving comprehension so well as the lady artists of today are beginning to do, and all because they do not know them so well nor appreciate them so truly.

I do not know that women will ever make historical pictures. Their living genius reaches forth toward subjects warm with life. And it is just such subjects that will touch all human hearts, and found a new school of painting that will eclipse all the other schools of painting that have ever been.—Helen Wilmans, in Chicago Express.

Why a Husband Drew Forth His Wallet.

"I haven't seen your pet dog for several days," said a Somerville husband to his wife.

"No," she replied; "the fact is I have given him away."

"Why, you needn't have done that. I had no particular objection to him."

"Oh, I know that, but I thought it was not right for me to have a pet dog about the house when I have such a good, kind husband to lavish my affections upon."

The husband sank into a chair, with a deep sigh.

"How much do you want, Mary?" he asked, as he drew his wallet from his pocket; "it can't be a dress and sacque, for the winter is nearly over."

"No," she said, "it is not a sealskin sacque; but I would like a dress, new silk for the spring, and you know it's got to be bought and made, and all that."

"Now," he said, as he handed her the money, "what proof of your affection will you give me when you want another dress, since you have given away your dog?"

"Oh," she sweetly replied, "I've given the dog to my sister, and then you get him back again."—Somerville Journal.

Musselman Marriages.

The law of marriage among the Mohammedans is very curious and interesting. The prohibited degrees are not very unlike those of Christian countries, except that a man may marry his relation-ship. But women, not men, are fettered or prohibited by various peculiar rules on inequality in family, religion, freedom, character, fortune and calling. A husband of a free woman may, if he considers her to be poor companionship by marrying afterward a slave. The first Mussulman lady that must aspire to wed a woman whose father and grandfather are Mussulmans. So, too, there is an inequality enough to justify a divorce between the husband is proved to be a drunkard or a profligate. Barbers and scavengers should not look for wives in the families of merchants and perfumers. A marriage may be dissolved by the Cadi for inequality where the bridegroom is without means for supporting the wife for a year, or at least a month. Some of these prohibitions are clearly absolute. Their general purpose may well have been the laudable one of defending the weaker party to a contract of marriage from disparagement. The same appears to be the object of the very minute provisions laid down for showing consent to the woman. A father, though he may give his unweaned daughter in marriage, cannot decide as to her conformity on an adult daughter's marriage. There must be consent, though when a father, brother, or uncle is making the contract, a modest smile may be construed to signify it. When the contract is the act of a stranger or a distant relative, positive words of consent are required. The most stringent prohibitions relate, however, to religion. Marriage is illegal between Mussulmans and idolaters in a revolution. A Mussulman may marry a Jew or Christian who believes in the Old Testament, and even a Sabean, or worshiper of the stars, if she believes in a revelation. Disputes about the marriage between a Mohammedan and a Parsee are possible, woul apparently be a Christian, idolater, or heretic, before considerations of the are form a sufficient exchange save. "The confessors in unbelievers. An apostate, it is held, can not contract marriage even with an infidel. The same solicitude which guards women against unions which may prejudice them in body, estate, or soul, watches anxiously over their right to dower. The law descends into very minute details on the nature of the things of which the dower may consist. Pork, which is discourteously stigmatized as carrion, and wine, as might be presumed, cannot constitute dower for a believer, though either might, if stipulated for, make dower for an unbeliever. By no antecedent act of her own can a woman divest herself of her right to dower in the event of her marriage. The practical advantage of the principle is certainly neutralized by the fact that after marriage she may remit the whole. On the other hand, her power even to tie herself an injury is evidence that women are not the mere thralls they are often supposed to be by strangers to Mussulman laws and customs.

Women in Washington.

I have thought sometimes that I would write you one letter dwelling on the "seamy side" of society life as a correspondent at Washington sees it, says a writer in the Boston Transcript. Yet it seems ungracious to do so, where the pleasant side predominates so largely. I have no ambition for the sake of being cheaply satirical, to caricature those who can not "strike back."

Who, for instance, is more smart, bright, and clever than Mrs. Logan, whose sorest point would be wounded were it known to the world that she lacked savoir faire in matters as trivial as those that pertain to success in society.

Many things do come under a correspondent's notice, however, that appeal irresistibly to the comic vein, and this arises largely from the transient mess of those who figure there, the crudeness of the relays of social forces that are all the while coming to us fresh from the people. As illustrating this, I call to mind the letter of a far Western Senator's wife whose term expired some time ago. She had been ill, or otherwise prevented from figuring in what she regarded as "soc ety," during the most of her husband's term, and the last winter of their stay she evidently resolved to cut a figure before in the attempt. She was brought by a friend of mine to see me early on one of my reception days, just after she had come on from New York in December, with a stunning new robe, which she kindly described to me at some length. The elegant velvet brocade in front, the rich silk and particularly called my attention to, in the details of its trimming and other salient points. Finally she told me that if I would take care of her interests in my column during the winter I should be well paid for it. By this time I had discovered that the lady did not know any better, and I said that if she took a part in society I would be happy to mention her name in turn with the rest. But that I could not make a specialty of one over another, and my pecuniary contract was with the editor and not all with those of whom I wrote. She expressed much surprise, and said she had always supposed that society ladies paid for such things, and she hoped that I would not feel that she had taken any liberty with me. Her letter, written in pencil on a sheet of paper with the angust heading, "United States Senate, Washington, D. C., 18—," stamped in line in upper right-hand corner, and, most incongruous yet, the Senator (her husband) himself brought it, and told me that he would not aspire to wed a woman whose father and grandfather are Mussulmans. So, too, there is an inequality enough to justify a proper belief the husband is proved to be a drunkard or a profligate. Barbers and scavengers should not look for wives in the families of merchants and perfumers. A marriage may be dissolved by the Cadi for inequality where the bridegroom is without means for supporting the wife for a year, or at least a month. Some of these prohibitions are clearly absolute. Their general purpose may well have been the laudable one of defending the weaker party to a contract of marriage from disparagement. The same appears to be the object of the very minute provisions laid down for showing consent to the woman. THE OLD ROMAN'S TALK.

Interview with Senator Thurman—Extravagance in Office as Compared with the Good Old Days—Recollections.

A New York World correspondent recently interviewed ex-Semtor Allen G. Thurman, at his modest home in Columbus, Ohio:

"In a quiet, unpretentious-looking two-story red brick house on High street, a few blocks away from the State Capitol Building, lives ex-Senator Thurman. He built the house when he moved from Chillicothe, Ohio, to Columbus in 1853, and it has been his home ever since. There is no yard in front and the door is reached by a single stone step. It was let in by a little homesmid who looked as clean and prim and smooth as if she had just come from hearing one of Cotton Mather's sermons. Would I step into the library? Mr. Thurman would be in in a moment. I went back through the broad, high hallway that reminded me of a Virginia house of the olden time, and found the library to be a large, square room with many easy chairs, a table with a lamp, shelves of books reaching to the ceiling on two sides, and a big, roaring fire. And in a moment in came the great ex-Senator. I knew before I met him he was seventy-one years old, and I expected to see a man somewhat bent with age and very white headed. But he was not bent, nor was he very white-h aded. When he had sat down in a big arm-chair, which he comfortably filled, he looked very hale and comfortable. He was stronger, far stronger and younger looking than two-thirds of the members of the United States Supreme Court, and a thereiso comfort and dignity, subscribes herself "Celia Stewart Sherman.

"I have many autographs of letters that character which I prize for their sweet individuality, as well as for being records of benevolent work in which it has been my privilege to be intimately associated together with these and other ladi s, better known at a distance for their place in the evanescent pageant of official life than by the treasures they are laying up in heaven.

It is only your shallow, haunting woman who thinks her highest glory is in the station or even his given name with the "Mrs." prefixed, grandiloquently before her signature. I have in my collection one nearly as florid as the above, from the wife of a district judge here, signed "Mrs. Judge ——," and she took much asking as commanding me to report the subject of a ball at the British Legation, and to mention that she was "attired in lavender broaded satin; ornaments diamonds."

A REVEREND gentleman, addressing a Sunday-school convent, was trying to enforce the idea that the hearts of the little ones were filled with pride and vanity. Taking his watch and holding it up he said: "Now, here is my watch; suppose it does not keep good time; suppose it does not, two-pence slow; what shall I do with it?" "Sell it," shouted a youngster

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate bills were introduced as follows on Feb. 16: To amend Howell's statutes relative to punishment for libel and slander: to provide for placing under ground all telegraph, telephone, and electric light wires in all incorporated cities; to amend an act relative to executions in criminal and penal cases; to amend an act relative to fishing in rivers; to give 4 2 fish and game protection; to provide for the appointment of Deputy Insurance Commissioners; to prevent the introduction and sale of intoxicating liquors with cheaters. Curtis J. Boland, of Jackson, was on Thursday appointed and confirmed to succeed Labor Commissioner, and who was opposed by several Republican papers and Senators who resent his course in the Ferry fight two years ago, withdrew his name. C. V. R. Pond, of Quincy, was nominated by the Governor, and confirmed at once by the Senate. The House spent the greater part of the day in discussing a resolution to submit the prohibitory amendment to the Constitution at the State election, and after a hot and exciting debate the resolution was passed by a vote of 55 to 28, exactly the necessary two-thirds vote being cast for it. Nin-teen Pinkonists voted for and two Republicans against submission. A favorable report was made on a bill prov ding for the election of a Solicitor General, while the bill providing for capital punishment for certain cases of murder was reported unfavorably. A bill abolishing the contra t in re-section in the manufacturing of cord wood was put and defeated in committee of the whole.

A convenance resolution asking Michigan members of Congress to support the Sumner postal telegraph bill passed both houses Feb. 18. Senator Jerome's bill to incorporate the Grand, the Western Union Telegraph Company, and the Associated Press were roundly denounced. In the Senate, a bill was passed to prevent the incorporation of mutual insurance companies to insure against cyclones and tornadoes. To-day no business was passed in the Senate. Incorporating Three Oaks, detaching Litchfield Township, Hillsdale County, from Jonesville and attaching it to Litchfield Township. Incorporating Grass Lake, Jackson County, and Hillsdale. The House was occupied with a local or new bills. The most important were: To Incorporate the Detroit Belt Line Railway Company; to amend the law relative to evidence in divorce cases; relative to the formation of street-railway companies; relative to the construction of railways; to provide for a uniformity of text-books in schools; to provide punishment for wife-beaters; to provide for free text-books in public schools; to facilitate the collection of judgments against railway companies or corporations; to encourage the construction of fences along highways to prevent snow-drifts; providing for the incor oration of building, loan, and savings associations. A bill to abolish the county court at sessions in the house of Correction was passed, after an unavailing effort to break its force by amendment. The House was engaged the bill. The bill to give the Supreme Court an additional judge was killed in the House by a vote of 46 to 46. The bill fixed the salaries at $6,000, and the farmers defeated it for that reason. It was then reconsidered, and salaries made $5,000.

The House passed the following bills on Feb 20: Extending the time for collecting taxes in the city of Kalamazoo; authorizing the city of Detroit to issue certificates of indebtedness in lieu of Exart to borrow money; authorizing the time for collecting taxes in Otiwa county; to incorporate the village of Ar-lington, Van Buren County. Incorporating the village of Ionia; amending the charter relative to primary schools; incorporating the village of Ypsilanti. Edmonds' bill incorporating the Soldiers' Home. The following bills were introduced: To establish and regulate a mechanic's lien; to provide for the appointment of the general railroad laws; to repeal an act to prevent the purchase of elections; to validate and confirm proceedings under sec. 55 of an act for the incorporation of manufacturing companies; to prevent accidents most additional trains; to prevent the purchase of votes; to abolish the office of Commissioner of Railroads; to amend

There is a temperance lesson in the fact that three empty quart bottles that had contained whisky were found by the side of five Indians who froze to death in Indian Territory the other day.

Captain Williams, the famous peace officer of New York, is a strong temperance man and urges the purchase of temperance upon the men in command. He congratulates himself that ten of his seventeen, four remain sober, and two detectives are good, solid temperance men.

Alabama and Missouri have passed bills similar to the Michigan law, providing for the study in public schools of the physiological effects of alcohol and other narcotics. Instruction must be given in these subjects in all the schools supported by the State. New Jersey and Pennsylvania have similar laws in force, and Connecticut and Rhode Island will soon follow in the same way. A wide-spread result of these actions will be W. C. T. U.

It is said that agents of American and foreign dynamite societies have been experimenting in a secluded valley near Huntingdon, Pa., the results of their investigations being the perfecting of a destructive explosive of great power which can be timed with the utmost nicety.

A special dispatch from New York, based on what is claimed to be reliable medical authority, says:

Notwithstanding the new colored report of ex-Guiteau's health recently given in a medical journal, the truth is ex-Guiteau is a very sick man, and his death is apparently not far distant. The public have no concept of the shattered condition of his physical system. It is hoped the affection of the tongue may not prove fatal, but there is, as yet, no appearance of its not developing a malignant and fatal disease. Although somewhat better now than some weeks ago, the enlarged and inflated tongue continues, making it painful to speak, so swollen limbs the only amusement he can take. In addition to this malady ex-Guiteau is a terrible sufferer from insomnia, and it seems to have taken possession of his whole system. He has had most of his teeth drawn, to lessen the nervous tetanic and mania in the jaw caused by his tall a year ago, so still accustomed very great suffering and periodic paroxysms. It is a fact that should he longer be confined from the country that over Guiteau's rapidly breaking down and apparently settled hope of ex-medical authorities should become suspected relief, he will not live long among the living.

At the Central General Sessions in New York city, Roland Short, who robbed Capt. Dixon on a Broadway horse car, pleaded guilty. Mr. Hoyt was instructed from Albany to accept. Mr. Noble, the woman who shot Short, was held in $500 for trial. Upon her and suits was discontinued by the complainant.

William H. Vanderbilt recently paid a New York banking firm $1,000,000 for seven West Shore bonds to enable Jerome Phillips, Vanderbilt's son-in-law, to purchase control of the road. Vanderbilt said the money was a personal loan and not a corporate transaction.

MOSES W. FIELD.

Hon. Allen B. Morse.

Hon. Allen B. Morse, the fusion nominee for judge of the supreme court, was born in Ottawa, Iowa county, this state, Jan. 7, 39. His father, Hon. John L. Morse, was for 12 years probate judge, and also a member of the state legislature, and has also held high judicial and legislative offices since his removal to Wight county, Ia.

Allen B. was educated at the agricultural college, and commenced to study law in 1860. He was one of the first to enlist when the war broke out, joining the Sixteenth Michigan as private.

In 1863 he was transferred to the Twenty first Michigan, and by gallantry at Chickamauga won a position on the staff of Col. F. T. Sherman, who commanded the first brigade of Sherman's division. He led the storming party at the attack on Mission Ridge, and there lost an arm. On being invalided out he received most flattering testimonials from both Sherman and Sheridan, his recollected tog conspicuous bravery at Hanover court house, Gaines' Mill, Manassas, Antietam and Chickamauga. Returning home he resumed his law studies, and in 1866 was elected prosecuting attorney of Ionia county. In 1874, as democratic candidate for senator, he carried his district, one of the most republican in the state, by a majority of 2,211. In the same year he married the daughter of George W. Van Horn, by whom he has had several children. As a lawyer Mr. Morse has long been famous for clearly, forcibly and concisely stating a case. He has a taste for politics, but grasping the material facts in the case at issue and declining controversial matter foreign to it, is one of his characteristics. His delivery is clear, forcible and effective. His opinions, when formed, are tenaciously held.

He is a good speaker and has a fine presence. He stands well at the bar and is respected by all. The best proof of his popularity and ability is that he received the democratic nomination for supreme judge in a district which knows him best. [Ionia Sentinel.

OFF FOR WASHINGTON

President Cleveland's Quiet Departure from Albany.

President-elect Cleveland and party reached the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western depot, Jersey City, at 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. Cleveland, Daniel Manning, and Hon. Wilbur F. Sanford occupied one carriage, and Governor Hill, the President-elect, left Albany for Washington on the regular express train of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad, which was due to leave Albany at 8:30 o'clock. Governor Hill and party were to have left Albany in a special train, but as there were only two cars ready for the train when the hour arrived, it was decided to go on the regular express train. It was a cold, raw morning, and a heavy snow storm was falling. Governor Hill and party arrived at the depot in carriages at 8:15 o'clock. Governor Hill was accompanied by his private secretary, Mr. Nixon, and Adjutant-General Josiah Pierson, who was in full uniform. Governor Hill was received by Superintendent Thomas Fitzgerald, Assistant Superintendent Charles Hopkins, and Ticket Agent Thomas Hanlon. Governor Hill and party were shown to the private car Cayuga, which was in waiting at the depot. Governor Hill and party entered the car at once, and the train left the depot at 8:30 o'clock. The train was in charge of Conductor Wheeler and Engineer Hall. The train was due to arrive at Jersey City at 12:30 p. m. Governor Hill and party were met at the depot by Mayor Cleveland, Mayor Gilon, Mayor Orr, Mayor Cooper, Mayor Ames, and Mayor Wanser, of Jersey City, Hoboken, Orange, Paterson, and Newark, respectively, and by Mayor Low, of Brooklyn, and Mayor Grace, of New York. Governor Hill and party were received by the mayors and escorted to the ferry-boat Jersey City, which was in waiting at the foot of the depot. The boat left the slip at 9:30 o'clock, and arrived at the foot of Cortlandt street, New York, at 9:45 o'clock. It is said that every member of the Illinois bar both drank and gambles when Judge David Davis first joines it. He having made up his mind to do neither, has outlived them all.

"The Modern Bartender's Guide" has just been issued by a New York publisher. The modern bartender doesn't need a guide so badly as the modern young man who patronizes the bar.—Norristown Herald.

The liquor-sellers of Brooklyn N. Y., had a procession recently; the Black Maria, the penitentiary wagon, which had taken its cargo in as the procession came along, followed in its rear for about a mile very appropriately.

A Lafayette lady, a model wife and mother, broke her husband of the saloon habit by walking up to the bar beside him and calling for the beer. She broke the awful silence, as they walked home with the remark, "I love you, my husband, and if you are going to hell I am going right along with you."

Whiskey impels the hand and nerves the heart of the murderer, and it has been demonstrated nearly every gallows that ever was erected. It has impoverished, brutalized and disgraced millions, and it is certainly adding to the store of agonies unspeakable reserved for generations yet to come.—Chicago Herald.

An earthquake at Lancaster, Pa., shook buildings and threw plates from tables. Services were suspended in the churches until the shock subsided.

A congress of churches, embracing all Christian denominations, will be held in Hartford, Conn., early in May.

The Directors of the New York Central Road report that owing to the snow blockade nothing was earned on the stock during February. The balance for the quarter was $910,000, out of which $891,781 was appropriated for a dividend of 1 per cent.

Murray Hill Church, at New York, is about to retire Dr. Burchard, of "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion" memory, on a salary of $5,000 per year, and secure a younger and more energetic pastor.

Nearly six thousand pounds of nitroglycerine exploded at a factory three miles south of Bradford, Pennsylvania. Two men were killed, one of them being sent cred in fragments all over the neighborhood. The site of the building is marked by an immense hole in the ground.

New York dispatches of the 11th inst. report a marked improvement, though only a temporary one, it is feared, in Gen. Grant's condition. "His physicians attribute the improvement to a change in remedies. Up to yesterday they have depended upon anodynes to give him the needed repose. These interfered with his digestion, aggravated his stomach weakness, and left him weaker every day. Stimulation was resorted to, and, although the patient expressed great distaste for anything alcoholic, its use has been followed by the happy effect described. While his physicians do not expect any permanent improvement, they are hopeful that the returning strength of the patient will so brace his digestive functions that he will be able to resist the inroads of his disease perhaps for months."

Mrs. Willis Henderson, 23 years old, the pretty wife of a prominent farmer at West Shelby, N. Y., blew out her brains.

Fire in Gill's art store at Springfield, Mass., damaged pictures, statuary, books, and bric-a-brac $50,000.

The Governor of Kansas has signed the new temperance bill, which requires that citizens shall appear before the county Attorney and testify under oath as to their knowledge of the purchase and sale of liquors, this done away with the grand jury investigations in the future.

Three of the convicts who escaped from the Michigan State Prison were recaptured through the snow from Mosherville to Jackson, jaded and hungry, and sent back to serve out the sentences.

The action taken by Congress in its closing hours with regard to the Oklahoma question was truly this. The Weaver Republican bill, brought in by Lanes for Mercer as Missouri re Cole, and Nicholas W. Boone, of Missouri, Democrat, was passed.

At the Interior Department in Washington, the claims of the Oklahoma colonists, reported by Secretary Lamar to Congress, consist of 5,091 claims, with 13,000 declarations of intent. Secretary Lamar considers that these negotiations shall be opened through the usual land agencies, and that he left to the President's discretion. Representative Hanback, of Kansas, who alleged that the troops should be withdrawn.

It is prophesied that the President will, before the 4th of March, appoint a Judge to the Supreme Court of the United States, and appoint a Judge Advocate in the West whose chief duty would be to see that Mahlon Ford, Jr., of Kentucky, the defaulter at Washington, receives the sentence to which he has been convicted. Ford is now in the Columbus Penitentiary.

The Democratic Senators have come to the conclusion that it is unadvisable to call a caucus to consider the Presidential question. Randall and Lamar on the one hand and Bayard and Voorhees on the other are known to be unalterably opposed to each other, and a caucus would only result in discord, and would not be productive of any good.

Advices from Indian Territory to the effect that the Cherokees have refused to ratify the treaty with the United States, by which the Cherokee Strip is to be opened to settlement, are confirmed. What was supposed to be an affirmative vote was changed to a negative one after the treaty had been signed by the Commissioners. The Cherokees claim that the Commissioners had no authority to change the treaty after it had been signed, and refused to recognize it.

The Governor of Dakota Territory has the gratifying report for about twenty-five counties, which will be the basis for the application for admission to the Union.

Shall the County Seat be Removed?

On the county-seat question, Charlevoix is no more selfish than any other town would be under similar circumstances. She will keep it as long as she can, and when it must be removed, she will probably seek to put it where it will be most convenient to her business. If, as now seems probable, we are to have a railroad through East Jordan to Ironton, and on to Charlevoix, in a few months, no more convenient place could be given as outside our borders than East Jordan, except of course, it might by some chance go to Ironton. If the eastern half of the county want the county seat at East Jordan and are ready to erect permanent buildings, they have only Charlevoix and the extreme west to contend with now; while, on the other hand, if this move is simply one of "spite," as has been alleged, and the intent is to keep it moving, then, in the light of convenience for travel, business, etc., especially if this railroad should be built; there would be not only Charlevoix and the west end, but South Arm and a large portion of the south half to overcome. Can they do it? Reference to the table of population in this issue will show that the township of Charlevoix, Eveline, Marion, Norwood, South Arm, and at least one-half of Hayes and Wilson could oppose a removal from East Jordan with considerable more than half the entire population of the county, saying nothing of the impossibility of securing ten supervisors to permit it to be again submitted to the people.

Until the people are ready to erect permanent county buildings, let them consider the propriety of moving away from the very commodious and complete offices now furnished them practically free. No repairs, no insurance, no expense of anykind except to supply such office furniture as is from time to time needed to keep pace with the increasing business of the county.

Here is a court room unsurpassed we are informed by any in this circuit for capacity and convenience; here is a jail built to hold prisoners beyond any possibility of escape, and large enough for any ordinary demand; here are well-lighted, well-heated, convenient offices, sufficient for the use of the county for a number of years, all practically free. Now are the tax payers ready to say: These are not enough; we want offices and buildings of our own; built and paid for by the whole county. Do the taxpayers feel so rich that they want to build? If not, then why move out of a good house until another is provided for?

Population of Charlevoix.

Since publishing the census last year, we have had frequent calls for copies of the same. That date of the paper being now out of print, we give the figures another insertion, with the census of 1874 added, for comparison. Parliamentary Rules.

We have recently received from the publishers, the Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich., a copy of "Smith's Diagram of Parliamentary Rules," showing the relation of any motion to every other motion, and answering at a glance over five hundred questions in parliamentary practice. The work is designed for all who may be called upon to preside over business meetings, all who ever have occasion to take part in business proceedings, and all who may wish to inform themselves on parliamentary rules. By an ingeniously devised system of diverging and converging lines, all the rules applying to any given motion, and all the motions coming under any given rule, are presented at one view, furnishing to a chairman instant information on any point upon which doubts may arise. Size of diagram 12½ x 6½ inches. A key is appended, containing full explanations, hints, and directions for conducting deliberative proceedings, the whole put up in neat covers, convenient and durable for pocket use. Many who have used Cushing's and Jefferson's manual, take this and after examination pronounce it the best. Most flattering testimonials are published from Ex-Gov. Jerome, Ex-Senator Ferry, Hon. J. W. Keifer, Ex-Speaker of the U. S. house of representatives, Hon. D. L. Crossman, clerk of the Michigan house of representatives, and hundreds of others of like experience, all of whom pronounce it the most simple and most practical work of the kind ever published. Single copies by mail, postpaid, 50 cents.

The cabinet which Mr. Cleveland has selected is a very strong one at every point. There is not a dangerous or uncertain element in it. It is not only full of brains, but it is also full of that moderation and steady business ability best suited to manage the affairs of a great nation, whose chief interest is to have peace abroad and social order and economical administration at home. Bayard will be a strict constructionist of the Monroe doctrine in foreign policy, and will thus avoid complications; Garland will be a liberal constructionist of the constitution in domestic policy, and thus avoid anything like a revival of Calhounism in a democratic administration; Manning is a man of solid business ability for the treasury, and a very shrewd political adviser; Endicott has good abilities, and will give tone to the administration as war minister; Vilas and Whitney are young and brilliant men, and the latter will have ample opportunity to exhibit his business talents in the rebuilding of the navy; while Lamar will typify the complete reconciliation of the sections, and bring to the administration of the interior department vast experience in public affairs, the most sterling integrity, and the very highest order of ability. It is a cabinet of all the talents, and many of the virtues; but it will have to deal with a congress of all the stupidities and many of the vices.—[Evening News.

The grand old party in this state is demoralized. It has passed as its standard bearer a man who says he has not been a republican for six or eight years, and who accepted the nomination of the prohibition party. It is only a few months since the excitable republican began to tear his hair at the mere mention of the words "mugwump" or "prohibitionist," but as a dose necessary to success the party has swallowed with a smile a double dose of mugwumpism and prohibitionism which at any previous period in its history it would have spurned.

Otis Fuller, editor of the St. Johns Republican, pays the following compliment to Hon. A. B. Morse of Ionia, fusion candidate for justice of the supreme court: "In the selection of Ben. Moore of Ionia, for judge of the supreme court, the democrats have brought out a brave soldier, a good lawyer and a thoroughly popular gentleman. The republicans can win in the coming campaign only by bringing forward a man of the people with an equally good record."

Hon. S. A. Strong, who was a delegate to the late prohibition state convention, and is an ardent prohibitionist, says the nomination of Judge Cooley by his party as a candidate for judge of the supreme court, was a sell out to the republican party brought about by the shrewd management of a few leading prohibitionists working in the interest of the republicans, and that but a few of the delegates suspected the nature of the transaction until after the nomination had been made, and the convention had adjourned. It was then, of course, too late to remedy the matter, but Mr. Strong says that while the sale has been consummated the shrewd managers of the scheme will not be able to deliver the goods, and he does not believe a majority of the prohibitionists will support the ticket placed in nomination.—[Kalamazoo Gazette.

Said one of the most prominent republican politicians in the state to the writer the other day: "You have nominated a magnificent candidate in Allen B. Morse for justice of the supreme court. There isn't a squarer or better man in the state than the gallant major. He has a profound love of justice, possesses real mental acumen, and is entirely free from corporate influences. He would make a pure, able and patriotic member of the supreme court.—[Lansing Journal.

Mr. Cleveland's policy is still uncertain, but it is rapidly assuming a definite shape. There is too much consertatism in it to please the majority of his party. "One thing has been developed," said Congressman Van Eaton of Mississippi this morning. "That came out at the first meeting of Cleveland's cabinet. The discovery was then made that they had found their master. Cleveland is to be the president."—[Press Despatch.

Veterans of the war, and members of the G. A. R. have this spring a chance to show whether they have a love for their fellow-soldier, or whether their organization is simply for political purposes. Allen B. Morse is on record as being as brave a soldier as ever went through a fight, and left an arm on a southern battle field. If you love your comrade, give him your vote.

At the spring elections every greenbacker in Michigan must choose between a soft-money, one armed ex-soldier democrat and a high tariff, hard-money corporation republican attorney. No one doubts that the people of Michigan will elect Major Morse.—[Lansing Sentinel (Greenback.)

Deadbeats at the Capitol.

It is wonderful how many respectable deadbeats one meets in Washington. The leading liveryman of the city told me the other day that he had been asked for 25 cents to buy a drink by the son of a former president not long ago, and every day I see about the hotels here great men's sons, whose fathers are dead, leading the lives of 5-cent adventurers. One is a father who long stood at the head of the bar of this country, and another's father was in the senate, and held a place in Zach Taylor's cabinet. The latter old man there, who goes about with his shoulders stooping and his form clad in the meanest of butternut clothes, was, at the beginning of the war, one of the beaus of Washington, and he has been the second in duels in which senators fought senators. Once fortunate and wealthy, he was a necessity at any big social gathering. Now he is glad to take a drink with a messenger, and, like Bean Hickman, lives by his wits. There, on the opposite seat in the hotel lobby, is a well-dressed man who has the title of a judge, and who once held an important office in our diplomatic service. He has hobnobbed with cabinet men and presidents, but he will borrow a dollar of you if you will let him, and is far from adverse to drinking without asking the pedigree of the man who treats. Last night I asked him how he liked the climate of the city in which he was located as minister. He was sitting on the sofa beside him, and though I was not much acquainted with him we dropped into conversation. In reply to the above he said with the most winning suavity imaginable: "Ah, the climate? It was delightful. I am not very particular about the climate. I can live in any country, and I always enjoy myself. There are many pleasant things everywhere. I drink them. I enjoy life. I can do anything, in fact—" and here he looked me straight in the eye—"I can take a drink!"

I received his gaze without flinching, and he eye did not give a response, and after fully thirty seconds, he said, in a sad tone: "Ah! but you don't drink?"

"No," I replied; "it does not agree with me." There was an awkward pause, and then the talk went on as though nothing had happened.—Washington Cor. Cleveland Leader.

A preacher's wife of three years' standing says that she would rather have her husband go as a foreign missionary than to be a poster. She declares that she could stand the heathen in foreign lands better than she can endure the cranky men and officious women in the church. Since we come to think of it, we must confess that we do sometimes get some rather tremboe some people into our churches.—Hotchmond (Va.) Religious Herald.

A Celestial Tramp.

Encke's comet, whose return has been announced by the astronomers, is by no means a stranger. He is as really a part of the solar system as Mars or the earth, and all these centuries has been making his revolutions about the sun, passing and repassing our world with great frequency. Although often seen, this comet was unable to attract attention until 1818. During that year a comet was observed by the astronomer Pons whose motions could not be reconciled with the supposition of a parabolic orbit. Arago remarked that its elements were much like those of a comet which appeared in 18 , and others, by a simple comparison, identified it with a comet seen in 1795. Encke found that the observations might all be satisfied by supposing the comet to move in an elliptical orbit with a period of between three and four years. With a marvelous ingenuity he computed the perturbations effected by all the planets with the exception of Uranus and the Asteroids. He found that the comet moved in an elongated ellipse, the major axis of which was about 360,000,000 miles in length, and its minor axis not more than half the length of the former. In other words, the comet, instead of being a visitor from the great spaces between the solar system and the stars, was found to move in an orbit the extremity of which was 100,000,000 miles this side of Jupiter and nine times less remote than the planet Neptune. The approximate period of its revolution is 1,207 days, or about three and one-third years.

A peculiar interest attaches to this meteor from the fact that Encke proved, or seemed to prove, the planetary pull on this mass of matter would not fully satisfy the problem. He supposed, and made room for in his calculation, a resisting medium contrary to all the theories of the inter-planetary spaces hitherto entertained. The comet's period is shorter each return than before. By a paradox not beyond explication the friction, which would be supposed to lengthen the period of its revolution, on the contrary lessens what is called the centrifugal force, and draws the whole orbit into a smaller space about the sun. At all events, this is the reasoning of astronomers. They predict that ultimately the comet, sweeping around the sun in a constantly-diminishing orbit, will fall into the great luminary as an insignificant atom of the fuel with which the sun is supplied from day to day from the meteors and other drift-wood of limitless space.

That there may be a resisting medium in space which affects a comet but does not affect the planets, whose revolution has not sensibly changed since observations were first made, is regarded as not improbable from the attenuity of this medium, which to an attenuated mass like a comet would prove to be a measurable retarding power, while to a ponderous globe the resistance would be too small to become visible in a few thousands of years. Encke's comet is called the "short-period comet," its period being less than any other. It is a small and commonplace affair. But if people will be patient and we will arrive shortly probably just a trifle more worthy of public attention. Faye's comet, which visited this neighborhood in 1878, is due in eleven months, or in February, 1886. Not improbably in the meantime some enormous meteor of this order may be visible in the heavens.

A young woman with compact frame and a fresh complexion arrived at the Rock Island Depot the other day from the North. She got right off the train without any foolishness and walked toward the street. As she reached the sidewalk she set her big satchel down with a dull thud and stood a moment looking around, as in uncertainty. A fat depot porter asked her if he should not carry her satchel to a carriage and a hack driver made a reach for it.

"Drop that!" said she to the latter, kicking it out of his hands, and as he stood back respectfully she turned to the porter and observed: "I can carry anything that you can, thank you."

Just then a policeman came around the corner, and, seeing what he supposed was an outrageous attempt on the part of the men to impose on an unsophisticated girl, rushed up and grabbed the satchel.

"Come on, miss," said he; "where did you wish to go?"

He had only just got the words out of his mouth when the girl executed a flank movement and tripped him up as cleverly as a professional could have done. Seizing her satchel, she observed:

"When I've got any use for any of you tenderfeet I'll just call you. I'm down here on a little pleasure tour from Dakota, and I wouldn't give a cent of Chicago to understand right here that I don't need any help. The last thing I did before leaving my farm was to carry forty-five bags of potatoes on my shoulder to my nearest neighbor, a mile and a half away, and if I can't get around this here town with this little shopping-bag I'll go to the infirmary."

She was about to go on and her three auditors were slinking away when a fresh young man, a hotel runner, came up, and taking in the situation at a glance, said:

"Right this way, miss. Let me help you with your baggage."

He never got any further. The girl picked up her grip and dropped this young man as she had dropped the policeman. Then the others hustled, and as the young woman moved off she observed:

"If you duffers were up at Grand Forks do you know what we'd do with you? We'd organize a home for the aged and clap you in it the first thing. Come and see me when I'm having."—Chicago Herald.

The term "grass widow" is simply a barbarism, or fungus, which has attached itself to the English language. "Grace widow" is the term applied to a woman who becomes a widow by "grace or favor," not of necessity, by death, and had its origin in the early days of European civilization, when divorces were granted but seldom, and wholly by authority of the church. When such decree was granted to a woman, the words "Vidueta de gracia," or "widow by grace," in the language of the French it would read, "Veuve de grace," in the English term, "grass," is an incorrect way of pronouncing the French "grace."—Cortland Portrait's Weekly.

J. J. Bennett, of this place, while recently assisting in loading logs, had his leg broken below the knee. Drs. Bennett and Warne reduced the fracture and Jim is doing nicely. James Evans also sustained serious injuries lately, by being thrown from a load of hay, and in his fall came in contact with one of the sharpened stakes of the hay rack, the pointed stick penetrating the fleshy part of his thigh, and coming out near the groin. He is gaining slowly.

An almost fatal mishap occurred March 10th, to Jacob Lanway. While he was fastening the chain under the load, a maple log, fourteen feet long and fifteen inches in diameter, rolled back upon him; dropping about eight inches, striking him on "the small of the back," and holding him in that position and slowly crushing him down. There being help near he was quickly extricated from his uncomfortable and almost fatal position, and carried limp and senseless to his home. Dr. Warne was summoned, and found the patient suffering great pain; but after a careful examination he pronounced no bones broken, and no internal ruptures, but a narrow escape from death.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Brief Sketches of the Public Services of the Chosen Ministers.

[We are indebted to the Chicago Daily News for the following brief sketches of the President and Cabinet:]

GROVER CLEVELAND, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

GROVER CLEVELAND, President of the United States, was born at Caldwell, Essex county, March 18, 1837. His father was a Presbyterian minister, who has left a record of usefulness among the Presbyterian churches of the State, and a reputation for eminent piety. At seventeen, after a preparatory course in the academy at Clinton, Oneida county, Grover entered the junior class of Hamilton College, in that county, which he left in 1855 to accept a position as assistant teacher in an institution of learning in New York city. His next field of labor was in the office of Rogers, Bowen & Rogers, in Buffalo, where he read law for two years, and then, in 1859, went to the bar of Erie county. He began practice in the city of Buffalo, and remained in it for twenty years, during which time he was for a short period assistant district attorney for Erie county, and for three years sheriff of the county. He declined a nomination for the office of mayor of Buffalo, and was elected in 1881 by a majority of 1,100 over the strongest candidate the Republicans could put in the field. He was inaugurated January 1, 1882, and in November of the same year was elected governor of the State by a majority of 192,000 over Charles J. Folger, the Republican candidate. His career as governor is well known to the people of the country. He vetoed many jobbery bills passed by the legislature, and in his annual message to that body in January, 1883, he recommended the passage of a law to prevent the sale of legislative votes. He was renominated for governor in 1884, and was elected by a majority of 192,854 over Frederick Cook, Democrat, and Charles J. Folger, Republican. He was nominated for President by the Democratic national convention, which met at Chicago on July 8, 1884, and was elected November 4 following. He is a bachelor, and has never been married.

THOMAS F. BAYARD, OF DELAWARE, SECRETARY OF STATE.

Thomas F. Bayard is the hereditary Senator from Delaware, representing the third successive generation of his family to occupy a seat in the United States Senate from that State. Besides his grandfather and father, his uncle, Richard H., was a member of that body from 1836 to 1839 and from 1841 to 1845. Another uncle, Col. John Bayard, was a member of the Congress of Confederation of 1785. Two brothers named Bayard were among the lieutenants that fled from France to escape the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day in 1572. They went first to Poland, and later to New York. Senator Thomas F. Bayard was born at Wilmington, Delaware, Oct. 29, 1828, and was educated at Flushing school. Though trained for a commercial life during his early years, he adopted the profession of the law and was admitted to the bar in 1851. He was appointed United States District Attorney for the State of Delaware in 1853, but resigned the following year. Much, however, he succeeded to the latter's seat in the United States Senate, a place he now holds by an 11th election. He was a member of the electoral commission of 1877, and has often been a prominent name in Democratic conventions. He has been the most noted leader of his party in the Senate, a masterful debater and parliamentarian, and at no time for the last fifteen years has it been possible to reach a seat in either branch of congress from Mississippi, except in advance of the choice of delegates.

THE SERMAN AND McDONALD.

The Former Has No Opinion to Express and the Latter Not Disappointed.

At hotels where politicians congregate it was given out this morning that Senator Sherman has so far the Cabinet would not stick together. Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost is the motto he had given such an opinion.

"Senator Sherman has given no opinion of Cabinets," said the Senator.

"Have you a think of it, Mr. Thurman?"

"I have no opinion to express," he answered.

Joseph E. McDonald said he thought the President-elect could not have made a better selection in making his Cabinet, and so far as he noticed it was generally approved. From the newspaper opinions could be made. In personal conversation with the President-elect here in Indianapolis he had expressed himself as entirely satisfied, except some of the names that seem to have been mentioned for the individual members of the Cabinet. He was of course delighted to see, as he had always believed, that Mr. Bayard was to be a member of the Cabinet, and he considered him a gentleman of ability and integrity.

THOS. F. BAYARD, SECRETARY OF STATE.

DANIEL MANNING, OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Daniel Manning was educated in a newspaper office, and has been connected with the press of a number of cities. He is the head of a newspaper company. He still owns a large interest in the Albany Argus, and is the publisher of the Democratic Handbook. Mr. Manning is a banker, and has been a director in the Albany City National bank and other financial institutions. He has been a member of the Democratic state committee of New York for many years, and has been active in politics. He has been a delegate to every Democratic national convention of which he is a member since 1868. He was a delegate to the convention which nominated Seymour and Blair in 1868, and was a member of the committee which notified them of their nomination. He was also a delegate to the convention which nominated Greeley and Brown in 1872, and was a member of the committee which notified them of their nomination. He was a delegate to the convention which nominated Tilden and Hendricks in 1876, and was a member of the committee which notified them of their nomination. He was a delegate to the convention which nominated Hancock and English in 1880, and was a member of the committee which notified them of their nomination. He was a delegate to the convention which nominated Cleveland and Hendricks in 1884, and was a member of the committee which notified them of their nomination. He was also a member of the committee which notified Mr. Cleveland of his nomination for governor in 1882. Mr. Manning has been a prominent candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of New York, and especially prominent in connection with the nomination of Governor Cleveland. He was also prominently mentioned in connection with the nomination for governor in 1884, when Governor Cleveland was nominated. Mr. Manning has been a prominent candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of New York, and especially prominent in connection with the nomination of Governor Cleveland. He was also prominently mentioned in connection with the nomination for governor in 1884, when Governor Cleveland was nominated. He was also prominently mentioned in connection with the nomination for governor in 1884, when Governor Cleveland was nominated.

LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR, OF MISSISSIPPI, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

WILLIAM F. VILAS, OF WISCONSIN, POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

William F. Vilas was born in Vermont, of New England stock. His ancestors on the paternal side were among the first settlers of Windsor, Conn., and on the maternal side were among the first settlers of Hartford, Conn. His father was a graduate of Middlebury College, Vermont, and was a lawyer by profession. He was a member of the Vermont legislature, and was elected to congress from the Windsor district in 1840, but declined a renomination. He was also offered the position of chief justice of the supreme court of Vermont, but declined it. He removed to Wisconsin in 1842, and was elected to the first legislature of that State. He was also elected to the first constitutional convention, and but for the unexpected fusions of that time he would probably have been the nominee of his party. He was nominated for Vice President in 1876, and was nominated for the same office in 1881.

He was married near Cincinnati on the 25th of September, 1838, to Miss Eliza P. Morgan, by whom he had one son, born in 1845, but who lived to be only 3 years of age. This was the only child, and its death greatly affected the father. He was nurtured in the Presbyterian faith, and was a member of that communion until the organization of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Indianapolis in the year 1845, when he became a member of that parish, and was elected Senior Warden

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, OF MASSACHUSETTS, SECRETARY OF WAR.

William C. Endicott is a native of Salem, Mass., where he still resides, and is now about 59 years old. He graduated from Harvard College in 1847, and entered upon the practice of law in 1850. Gov. Washburn appointed him to a place on the Supreme bench of Massachusetts, which position he resigned in 1882 on account of ill-health. Until 1860 Judge Endicott was an old-line Whig, but from that time forward was a Democrat. He never was prominent in politics until the last campaign, when he was the Democratic candidate for Governor of the Bay State. As a lawyer he is said to be thorough, painstaking, and dignified. He stood high in the ranks of the judiciary while a member of the Supreme bench. He is a descendant of John Endicott, one of the first governors of Massachusetts. His mother was a daughter of the Hon. Jacob Crowninshield, who served a term in Congress, and was President Jefferson's Secretary of the Navy in 1805 to 1809.

WILLIAM C. WHITNEY, OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

William C. Whitney was born at Conway, Mass., in 1841. He graduated at Yale College in 1863, and at the Harvard Law School in 1865. He was admitted to the bar of Orange county, New York city, and especially identified himself with politics. He was appointed corporation counsel of New York City upon the downfall of the Tweed ring. His energy and ability in cleaning up the mass of litigation that grew out of the ring's fraudulent transactions made him prominent as a lawyer. He laid the foundation of a comfortable fortune by his professional practice, and married a daughter of Oliver W. Payne, of Ohio, one of the managing directors of the Standard Oil Company. Throughout his political career he has moved in close relations with Samuel J. Tilden, and has labored under the advice and direction of the sage of Greystone. He is a member of Tammany and the main ruler of New York City. Mr. Whitney conceived the plan of organizing the County Democracy of New York, and personally aided in its creation. He was essential organizer, and, after Daniel Manning, did more than any other one man to secure Cleveland's nomination and election. He is a clean-handed Democrat.

DANIEL S. LAMONT, THE PRESIDENT'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.

The Private Secretary to President Cleveland, Daniel S. Lamont, was born in Courtland county, N. Y., in 1851.

He was the only child of a country merchant and farmer, and was grave from an uncommonly precocious boyhood. He entered Hamilton college at the age of 17, and graduated with honors in 1872, and was soon published as the author of a book entitled "Lamont" was made a delegate to the Republican convention of 1876, and was a partisan of the stalwarts. His first office was that of Indian agent at Fort Berthold, Dak., but he soon left it to be the New York State Democratic committee.

Mr. Lamont was a youthful man about town in Albany when he gave him an introduction to one of the leading ladies and after his nomination to the governorship he was a frequent caller at the executive mansion. He had had experience as a newspaper man, having been for a number of years the editor of the Albany Journal. For the years of Governor Cleveland's administration of New York he was secretary of state, and after his nomination to the governorship he was a frequent caller at the executive mansion. OPINIONS OF THE NEWSPAPERS.

Comment by the New York Press on President Cleveland's Choice.

The Herald says: "The Cabinet as a whole stands for the strength with which an administration has been planned. There is bound to be some personal dissatisfaction due to geographical and factional considerations. New Jersey and Connecticut may feel at first at being passed over, Indiana may feel sore at the way the Democratic electoral vote slims the formation of the Democratic party, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri may think that they were entitled to more consideration, but the Cabinet is one in fact, after all, the people want good Cabinet ministers for the Cabinet ministers for the United States. During the struggle between the Federal and Confederate governments he gave his counsel to the Southern cause, first as a hesitating sympathizer and afterward as Senator. He was serving as a Senator in its Congress when the Confederacy collapsed. In his Mr. Garland practiced the Supreme Court of the United States, he practice known without talent. He was a skilful cavil, at the same time submitting an argument in support of his position which was a masterpiece of reasoning. He won his case, which was not decided until the fourth term of the Supreme Court, 1867. While it was pending he was elected United States Senator from Arkansas. He appeared to take his seat in the Senate March 4, 1877, but was not permitted to do so.

In 1874 Mr Garland was elected governor of Arkansas without opposition. His election as Senator took place during a time of bitter opposition. He began his term as successor to Powell Clayton, Republican, and March 4, 1877. In 1883 he was re-elected, and his term of service would not have expired until March 3, 1883.

DOCTORS FURIOUS.

A Physician Tell the Truth or Lie!—A Nice Point in Ethics.

A Sensible Health Official.

BALTIMORE, Md.—A decided stir has been made here over the question as to the right of physicians to certify to the merits of a remedy not in the modern pharmacopœia. Dr. Louis A. Siemers, one of the most prominent physicians in the South, and Health Officer of this city, had analyzed a much-discovered article, and certified officially not only to its efficacy but to the fact that it rejected old-time preparations of a character which, analyses had proved, obliterated and poisonous. The Medical Chirurgical Faculty, of which he is a member, held that he had violated the code of medical ethics, and much public interest was aroused because of the existence here of a high professional standing and official rank.

It was argued that to thus place a limitation to the acts of a physician, and especially of a health officer, was opposed to the spirit of the age; that many reasoning might have existed enough when it was to the interest of druggists or societies to invest themselves with a preparatory halo, but now, when all should be free and untrammeled, it was a species of barbarism. It was argued by a physician, especially of a health officer, that he could not publicly say remedy he knew to be injurious, but it was not to say that he should be debarred from saying to the merits of anything which he knew to be good. If this were so, the world would receive the benefit of half the discoveries in art or science. Thus the argument, while the hereby threatened action and talked of time-honored remedies, professional contempt, and ignoring in his opinion as to the efficacy of anything asserting that they did so from own experience with it and practical acquaintance.

He could be no gainsaying such evidence, but, as if to cap the climax, shortly afterwards there appeared another letter with autograph signatures of practicing physicians from all parts of the State, including the physicians of all the leading hospitals, the physician to the City Department, the port physician, vaccine physicians, and resident physicians of hotels all endorsing the discovery and stating that it had been tested by them in hospital and private practice for weeks with beneficial curative effect, and that many of whom no trace of opiates or poisons, even in other cough mixtures. They asserted that they had been induced to do this step in view of the many hurtful nefarious which contained narcotics and are the cause of the danger consequent on the. The remedy in question is Red Cross Cure. Such a conclusive answer as the surprise and fury of the few, public sentiment on the side of the Commissioners, and it is significant Dr. Stewart has since been appointed to the Mayor to a medical firm, and his appointment unanimously confirmed by Council.

As to the high professional reputation of gentlemen who endorsed his action, as the ex-health standing of the Medical Faculty of this city, whose opinion, at this city, widespread interest would been created in the subject, not for but in Philadelphia, Washington and other neighboring cities. The feeling naturally expressed by professional men that Red Star Cough Cure, on account freedom from narcotics and poisons, creates a most desirable new departure in medicine. This is the prominent opinion of authorities like Dr. Fawcett has been for thirty-five years a physician of the Union Protestant Infirmary, and has graduated from New York city, member of medical societies of New York, and Brooklyn, and large experience in civil and military Both of these gentlemen, together Dr. Siemers, are residents of the State of Maryland, have publicly put themselves record as to the evil of narcotic and the consequent value and importance of the new discovery referred to. It needed that public opinion has come to its own, and the assertion of the right in his whole course he was actuated by an earnest desire to benefit the community at large.

Making Gun Barrels.

The beautiful waved lines and curious wavelike figures that appear on the surface of gun barrels are really the result of welding, showing that two or more metals—iron and steel—are thoroughly blended in making the finest grades of gun barrels. The process of welding and blending steel and iron is a very interesting one. Flat pieces or ribbons of steel and iron are alternately arranged together and then welded in a cable. Several of these cables are then welded together, and drawn into a long, flat bar, which is spirally coiled around a hollow steel mandrel, called a mandrel. After the edges of these spiral bars are heated and firmly welded. The spiral coil is then upon what is called a welding mandrel, is again heated and carefully hammered into the shape of a gun barrel. It is during this hammering process that the beautiful waved lines appear, which the purpose of the metal is thoroughly closed. The last, or finishing, blow darkens the barrel, due to exactly its proper shape and size, by all the twistings, weldings, hammerings the metals are so that the mass has somewhat uniformity and toughness of woven cotton. A barrel thus made is called to have. Manufacturer and Builder.

Curing the Old Gander's Soul.

Many sir on a violin will sometimes Mohammedan Book of grease wild with delight. One night recently, in one occasion, at a country there was a curious performance. After dinner a lady entertained to a smallish on the lawn with from an accordion. A flock of geese feeding in the road just beyond the house, and with outstretched necks answered back with loud notes of delight. Soon a white gander came prancing a lively jig, keeping time to the music. For several minutes he kept up the performance, great disdain of the company. Presently he was tired several times to hurry, and the tones of the accordion never failed to set the old gander into a lively dance. Popular Science Monthly.

The Seal of Fidelity.

Quite recently the Canadian papers reported an anecdote of canine fidelity which, had it been told of a British soldier or a Hindu nurse, would have been brutted throughout the civilized world as an instance of unparalleled supremest devotion to duty. The story as told to us is that when nearing Montreal the engine-driver of a train drove a great dog standing on the track and barking furiously. The driver blew his whistle, yet the hound did not budge, but, crouching low, was struck by the locomotive and killed. Some pieces of white muslin on the engine attracting the driver's notice, he stopped the train and went back. Beside the dead dog was a dead child, which, it is supposed, had wandered on to the track and had gone to sleep. The poor watchful guardian had given its signal for the train to stop; but, unheeded, had died at its post, a victim to duty.—Chambers's Journal.

The Aborigines of China.

The southern portion of the present domain of China, comprising nearly one-third of the whole, is a comparatively recent addition to the empire, having come under the jurisdiction of the "Son of Heaven" only 2,000 years ago. The original inhabitants of this broad territory were easily subjugated. Portions of them were attached to their conquerors as vassals or slaves, and gradually, by intermarriage and the adoption of the customs of the Chinese, lost their identity and were absorbed by the more powerful race. Traces of this original element are still to be found in many localities, especially among the mountains, and may be seen in peculiarities of speech, customs and physiognomy. The best people, everywhere regarded as an inferior race, and numbering in the city of Canton alone 200,000 souls, are supposed to be the descendants of this indigenous race. In the mountain range which forms the northern border of the three southern provinces, and is a continuation of one section of the great Himalayan range, are over 100 tribes of these aboriginal people, who have constantly asserted their independence against Chinese aggressions. Comparatively little is known of them, but from the information derived from travelers, they seem, with but few exceptions, to be all of one race, and to be nearly allied to the Shans and Karens of Burmah. The Laos tribes, and those of the interior regions of Cambodia and Cochin China. The sublime self-conceit of the Chinese, and their indifference to everything outside of themselves, is strikingly seen in the fact that in all the centuries during which they have lived in constant contact with these various tribes they have learned but little that is reliable concerning their customs, habits of life, traditions, language or government. A few individuals have become interested, and have left brief accounts and some rude sketches, which are all the sources of information from the Chinese side that are available.—C. B. Henry, in Washington Republican.

The Reputation of a Standard Article is seldom injured by surreptitious imitators of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have not only lost money by attempting underhand competition with it, but have actually contributed to enhance the estimation in which the genuine medicine is held. The public at large has for many years been acquainted with the ear marks that distinguish the real from the spurious, and cannot be persuaded that other articles sold in a similar guise are equally good. Fever and ague, constipation, dyspepsia, and liver complaint are curable by clean heal bitters, eye-openers, and tonics, but the fact has long been proven and has generally known to admit of conscientious dispute, that for these and other maladies the great household medicine is a safe and thorough remedy. Not only in the United States, but in Mexico, South America, and the West Indies, its properties are widely recognized, and its reputation too firmly established to be shaken.

Congressmen Only the Country's Clerks.

The average Congressman considers himself a great man, but he is only a clerk after all. He is paid by the country to come here and apportion out the public funds to the running of the government. Other men decide how much the Government needs, and they furnish the Congressmen the figures. The average member knows nothing about it, and the best member for the country perhaps is he who knows the least. We merely pay them to divide our money for us. Else Government is already organized. We have all the laws we need, and the United States, if it were not for the necessity of the formality of passing the appropriations, could do better without Congress than with it. Still we have it, and we have to pay for it.—Curry, in Cleveland Leader.

What Shall the Church do About Intemperance?

Shall it do nothing? Shall it be silent on a subject like this? Shall the pulpit confine itself to the discussion of abstract questions of theology, or metaphysics, or disputations on science? Will any one demand that no word be spoken against such a destroyer as the liquor system?

The church of Jesus Christ is the friend of humanity. It must, therefore, be the enemy of man's enemies.

Has mankind a more terrible enemy than alcohol? It unquestionably destroys from eighty to one hundred thousand lives annually in this country alone. It sends souls to hell in numbers too great to be estimated without sickness of heart. Doesn't Christ want this work stopped? If His church feels no interest, who will come to the rescue? Infidels? The non-religious?

There is no such bold, defiant, successful enemy to the church as strong drink. The saloons and bars have more patrons among the young than the Sunday school and church. Here is one cause of small congregations in cities. The young who have become frequenters of such places conceive feelings of strong dislike for the church. Those who breathe a beer laden atmosphere through the week cannot endure the atmosphere of God's house on Sunday. The conversation of the dram shop creates a distaste for sermons, and Bacchanal songs are rivals to Zion's hymns. The drink habit makes men poor, and robs the treasury of the house of God.

The church of Christ is His army of occupation. Must it still, surrounded by such enemies, witness the progress of measures which threaten its destruction, and which, if not arrested, will surely destroy it, and refuse to strike it? Is it cowardice, or treason, or imbecility that demands the adoption of such a plan, and rebukes the faintest demonstration of vigilance on the part of the church?

Unless the church trains its members as soldiers to fight against evil, and destroy the works of the devil, it will become a by-word among men.

The boldest evils must receive the hardest blows. The greater the resistance the more determined must the attack be. That is a strange thing, of which we hear so much—"You can't put it down, and it is folly to try." We must try. If we do not put down the system it will pull the church down. It is pressing forward to greater conquests. Our antagonism alone will prevent it from ruling the whole world. And it rule would be ruin.

Every preacher and every man and woman in Christ's church should be on one side. No political affiliations should divide good men into parties, when moral issues are at stake. Let all thus unite, and announce it by significant acts, and, when possible, by votes, and a new day will dawn, in which rum will be rebuked.—[Washington Square Herald, Trenton, N.J.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

The People vs. John Connor—A Crooked Transaction.

Through all the business career of Mr. John Connor in Charlevoix there has been more or less of trouble and tribulation, and since the fire last fall he seems to have had more than his usual amount.

The stock of boots and shoes then partially destroyed was covered by a chattel mortgage in favor of W. D. Robinson & Co., of Detroit, who took possession of that portion saved, by Cruickshank & Grier, their attorneys, to secure themselves. Afterward, Mr. Connor was again permitted to have possession of the stock, to sell for them on certain conditions. The conditions were not fulfilled, and again the stock came into the hands of the attorneys of Robinson & Co. This firm then sent an agent here to adjust matters, and he found the stock 400 pairs short of the sheriff's inventory. A search warrant found some fine shoes sewed up in a bed tick in Connor's house. Further search brought forth large portions of the missing stock from Mrs. Connor's farm and elsewhere.

On Friday Connor was arrested, but released on bail to appear for examination on Tuesday. The prosecuting attorney being unavoidably detained away, the case was adjourned to Wednesday, and the examination is in progress to day. There have been found in his possession, secreted in various places, 167 pairs of boots and shoes, and 53 pairs of stockings.

On Sunday Kerr Budd became involved, having in his possession a trunk with instructions to take it into the country "for a woman." Failing to reach the place, he returned, leaving the trunk in the livery barn for further orders. The transaction being suspicious, the sheriff caused the arrest of Budd and the trunk to be opened, and it was found to contain 51 pairs of fine ladies' shoes. Budd claims he was employed to do the work, and knew of no crookedness, but he was held with bail for examination, to follow after Connor's examination.

At one time the discoveries caused much excitement, and promised to put in an unenviable position several prominent citizens. And the end is not yet reached.

The defense is conducted by F. W. Mayne, with J. Milo Eaton as counsel.

Fighting With Bashi-Bazouks.

I find that I am the first correspondent who has reached as far as Dobbah, and this I have done in a voyage from Dongola in a little lateen-rigged open boat. The village was destroyed long ago by the Mudir, and there is now nothing but the fort built, as all these forts are, on the very worst plan a fort can be, that of a square. Maj. Kitchener has, however, improved on its construction by running out bastions to enfilade the ditch. He had gone to Ambukol the day I arrived, and the only English there were a sergeant and two corporals in charge of the telegraph. "Every day is pretty nearly the same here, sir," they said, "and at night we are eagerly bitten by sand-flies," and a terrible plague the sand-flies, as they are called, are. They are nearly microscopical. I have never seen one, but they get into your bed through mosquito curtains and under the sheets and totally prevent your sleeping.

For the little garrison of Bashi-Bazouks I have great respect. Time after time it has been attacked, and has successfully defeated the attackers. The last time the Arabs laid recourse to strategy. They beat their tomtoms very vigorously half a mile off; meantime they crept silently into the ditch underneath the low bastion where was the one gun of the fort. One of them, however, let off a rifle by accident, and the garrison were at once alarmed. Though it was dark they could perceive thousands in the ditch, and they opened a withering fire upon them. The enemy, however, succeeded in actually seizing the wheels of the gun, and also the legs of the Turkish commandant, who was standing by, and a pull-devil-pull-baker took place. At length the officer was dragged within the ramparts. Hundreds of Arabs were mowed down in their desperate attempt to enter. In some places they threw slain over the ramparts, and thus walked over the prickly abattis. At others, where there was no ditch, but merely mimeon against the wall, they mounted on each other's shoulders. At one time they actually succeeded in bursting open a wicket near the gate, but all who entered were caught in a rat-trap—they found themselves in an open court from which there was no exit, and they were mowed down mercilessly. For two hours did the assault continue. At length the Arabs, having lost the greater part of their number, retired.

In these desperate assaults by these Arabs one is reminded of the heroism of their ancestors, the Saracens. The different points where the besiegers made their attacks were shown me. The ground was still strewn with helmets, garments, and sandals. The bodies were flung into the Nile. "We are tired of fighting," said the old commandant to me. "I wish you English would come and do some of it for us." It must indeed be a wretched life, as I used to find it when I was the only Englishman at Rowa Fort, just before Gen. Hicks' advance from Khartoum.—London News.

East Jordan, How do You Like It?

The last Boyne Statesman says: "We have every reason to expect that subsequent to the removal of the county seat to East Jordan it will come to Boyne City, and at the latter place county buildings will be erected. It is not expected that they will be built at East Jordan." We doubt if the people of East Jordan are working with any such idea. They are working for it for themselves; not for Boyne. We have some doubts about the ability of Boyne and the east end to remove again to suit their own pleasure, against the wishes of East Jordan. East Jordan will not permit such an idea to be contradicted now, before election, but she will fight for herself afterward,—all except perhaps one or two men. We are confidentially informed that at least one aspirant for a seat on the board of supervisors is very active for removal to East Jordan, and if he gets his seat will be the Judas to give the required two-thirds to submit again for removal from East Jordan to Boyne. The sentence above quoted from the Statesman gives foundation to the rumor. If East Jordan is working for herself, she will know the real sentiments of the gentleman who represents her on the next board of supervisors.

Candy.

A New York reporter makes the following revelations concerning the manufacture of candy: Candies that are molded, such as peppermints and gumdrops, or jellydrops, are poured into imprints made in cornstarch, which is easily dusted off. No flour is made with white sugar, pure gum Arabic, the whites of eggs beaten, and chopped almonds, Pingoli nuts, or pistache. None for use is to be boiled a long time, and is constantly stirred by machinery. Some candies are made in a few hours, while it takes a week to make sugared or burned almonds. Marrons glaces require a certain manipulation and to be long submerged in syrups, kept at a certain temperature, to become thoroughly flavored. The vegetables used in coloring are a purple fruity juice; red that supplies the reds and pinks, lettuce and spinach for greens, carrot for yellows, coffee and maple sugar are used for browns. The "Estelle" bonbon, made of apricot and marshmallow, is the latter thing in soft or French candy, while "cupids," or "opera favors," which are twisted sticks flavored with acid fruits, and cut into small pieces, are the Christmas feature in hard confectionery. "Strings," which are fat snips of chocolate and cinnamon hard candy, are also new.

An Editor's Honest Confession.

"Good morning," greeted a traveling man, as he came into the editor's sanctum.

"How d'y'e," said the editor.

"Fine day," continued the t. m.

"Yes, what do you know?" pursued the editor, tilting back in his chair to receive the latest news.

"Oh, nothing; nothing at all."

"That so?"

"Yes."

"Well, a man told me you didn't know anything, but I'll be darned if I thought you'd acknowledge it yourself."

The man scratched his head and wondered what right an editor had to catch him up on a little conventionality like that. Richmond Dispatch.

Of every twenty persons who, when a bill is presented, almost involuntarily exclaim "Leave it, I'll examine it," at least eighteen know the bill is all right, and of the eighteen probably sixteen could pay the amount just as well one time as another. It is quite as often the rich who thus thoughtlessly make a man run twice or more for his money as people of moderate means. "I never made a man call twice for his due," remarked a gentleman a few days since, and he was 80 years of age. Imagine the amount of happiness this man has contributed to the world.

Mrs. McCloskey, living on the third floor of a tenement house in New York, spanz from bed and threw her baby out of the window, instructing its skull. Drs. Sands and Shrady, consulting physicians in Gen. Grant's case, visited the General's residence and held a consultation with Dr. Douglass. They fully endorsed the treatment of the patient adopted by Drs. Barker and Douglass. The throat was in a comfortable condition. The local disease is well-nigh, for the present, to be stationary.

A decision was rendered in the United States circuit court at Boston in the suits against the stockholders of the defunct Pacific National Bank to recover the merchants to pay a recent assessment of 100 per cent. on their stock. The loss of the stockholders by this decision is $2,000,000.

Political Paragraphs.

Secretary Whitney has a number of experts investigating naval accounts.

Inasmuch as there is not an upper peninsula man on either state ticket, the Marquette Mining Journal advises voters to "carefully abstain from putting state tickets in the ballot box."

All the prominent corporation attorneys of Detroit have joined in an attempt to reelect Judge Cooley to the supreme bench, and have flooded the state with circulars asking the co-operations of attorneys. They will get mighty little assistance in this county.

The new government is retrenching in every possible manner, by cutting off useless clerks and appendages everywhere. Horses and carriages, drivers and stables maintained at public expense have been dispensed with, and a return to the simple economies is apparent in every department.

We understand that the Algonmb is now already for her season's work, and as soon as sufficient rain comes to settle the snow on the ice, she will commence breaking a channel. It is said that the ice in the straits is thawed more now than it was this time last year. [Cheboygan Democrat.

The supreme court is the safe guard of our liberties. Our legislature itself has not the power for good or evil that the supreme court has, for the court passes on the acts of the legislature, and when it gets so our supreme court is hired at a salary by railroads it is time a thorough overhauling should take place.—[Cheboygan Democrat.

The democrats and greenbackers have united upon a candidate, who is every way worthy of the public confidence. Mr. Morse is a lawyer of very good ability, a man of sound judgment and common sense and of popular sympathies, a gentleman of unquestioned integrity, and a gallant soldier with an empty sleeve.—[Evening News.

A republican who advertises only in his party paper, solicits custom only from republicans and evidently has no desire for custom from democrats. Our friends should bear that in mind and when they wish to purchase anything, look over the columns of the JOURNAL and then purchase of those who care enough about your trade to solicit it.

It has leaked out that an expert accountant from the third national bank in New York, has been engaged by secretary Manning, and has been assigned a large room in the treasury department, where he has been at work two days in an examination of certain treasury books. The knowledge of this fact adds much to the uneasiness in department circles.

How are the mighty fallen! Do you believe it, the great, grand and glorious republican party has "fused" with the prohibitionists, the party which says so much last fall that no republican newspaper could say me an enough thing against it. Surely this is a "distant coalition" as bad as any the truly good republican have so long heeded about. [Independent.

Last year our friends the prohibitionists were very pronounced in their resolutionary denunciations of the democratic platforms of organizations. What has came over them this year that they nominate a man for the supreme bench who out of thirty one cases against corporations gives thirty of them to the soulless monopolies? Are they satisfied with that record? [Evening News.

Commenting on the republican nominees for supreme judges, the Grand Rapids Democrat says: "From the resolutions adopted by the convention it would appear that in the opinion of the old leaders there was nothing in the state except Judge Cooley competent to sit on the supreme bench, and the wonder is that the convention did not recommend to the legislature that instead of increasing the number of supreme court judges to five they should reduce it to one, as there was really only the one man big enough to hold the position.

During the closing month of the old administration about 6,000 resignations of post offices were sent in, with some democrat recommended for a successor, but it is understood that the present administration does not look with favor on this species of political trading, and that none of these persons so recommended will be appointed where it is possible to find other competent men for the places. This is rather unfortunate for our friend Martin at Boyne, who, we understand, was recommended for the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Baldow.

Martin V. Montgomery, of Lansing, has been appointed commissioner of patents. It has been broadly hinted, and with good reason, that he deserves a better place. Perhaps he will get it. President Cleveland is reported as well pleased with him, and in the order of events he will be promoted. In fact, on the death of Mr. Clark, assistant Secretary of the interior, Mr. Montgomery was at once suggested for the place. We personally know him to be a patient and persistent worker for democracy, and these honors are a just recognition of his abilities.

Strange Conglomeration.

A Lansing correspondent writes: A prominent gentleman from Washtenaw says Judge Cooley declined, after two hours of importunity, to sign a petition asking the legislature to pass the bill now pending to prohibit the sale of liquor within five miles of the university at Ann Arbor. The report is founded upon the statement of the gentleman who asked Judge Cooley to sing the petition. A well known ex-senator of the greenback party said in the capitol to day that Judge Cooley told him in private conversation that he is a greenbacker in sentiment, and held more advanced opinions than the supreme court of the United States on that doctrine. These views will interest prohibitionists and friends of sound currency in the republican party. [G. R. Democrat.

A gentleman and lady went to the skating rink the other evening. She intended to exhibit her graceful glide on wheels. He was no skater, merely a spectator. And this is what he saw: "A dash, a crash, 'twas awful rush, but the roller skates upset her. A slip, a rip, she cut her lip, but the next time she'll do better. A slide she tried, the skates were snide, they proved to be a fetter. No more she'll soar the rink all o'er, because her ma won't let her."

A canal will work seven or eight days without drinking. In this he differs from some men, who drink seven or eight days without working.

Stuart Charles and family recently removed to this place from Kaylton, Tuscola county, Mich. They are much pleased with this country and contemplate making it their future home.

The spring term of school opens in April with Miss Nettie M. Hinks officiating as teacher.

John Chamberlain and family recently returned home from their visit to Lansing. While there John visited the capitol and was kindly greeted as he entertained by Lieutenant Gov. Buttrick, and Representative Hampton.

E. M. Carr, of Charlevoix, recently made a business and social trip to this town.

Mrs. Harry Atkins, of Ironton, who died at her home March 14th, was for a few years a resident of this place. Her maiden name was Addie Copeland. She came in company with her parents to this township a few years ago. Upon organization of the Good Templars Lodge at this place, her name appears as one of the original members. A few years later, she left this village to live in Ironton, and she has lived an earnest, faithful member and a christian to her death. Her sweet faith never failed her in those years, or her late sickness; but was shown and manifested to her exemplary christian character and fortitude. Her desire to live a christian was great. Her infant child died a few days previous. She was aware that she could not recover, and her request was to have her cold inherited her side. She was born in St. Lawrence county. The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church, at this place, at two o'clock p. m. Sunday. Sermon by Rev. Mr. Whitman, to be proposed. Text, the fifth verse of the 23d Psalm. She was about 24 years of age, and leaves a husband, aged parents, two brothers and one sister.

S. S. Simpson has received his idea of going to the other side of the "Peninsula" with his store building. He has altered the runners placed under one of his buildings preparatory to transhipping.

Rev. Mr. Blake assisted by Rev. Mr. Whitman are holding a series of meetings in the East dorcas school house. The interest of the services could weather the attendance is not as large as it should be. Considerable good feeling is manifest among the congregation.

A Mr. Mobbs, of Banks township, has removed to this place, and is negotiating with contractor to erect a new store building in East Jordan; building to be 20x35 feet, two stories.

Miss Anna Keat and Miss Anna Moore have returned home from their Bay Springs visit.

Mrs. Kimble Bagley, of Banks, is the guest of her brother A. J. Hawkes.

According to actual measurement their has been up to this date a fall of 22 feet of snow this season.

P. H. La Chair is making large additions to his stock of jewelry.

Dishonorable Warfare.

In spite of the fact that the Boyne Statesman regards any expression concerning the county seat imbroglio on the part of anybody outside the limits of Charlevoix county as rank impertinence, we venture to say that the methods which are being adopted by some of the East Jordanites, will not commend themselves to good citizens. We have before us a letter from a Charlevoix county man who was in East Jordan last week, which states that it is an open secret in that village that a number of hundreds of dollars have been raised and will be used to influence the election next month. The writer of said letter was informed by a young man not resident of the county (for he was entered there board and free quarters if he would remain until election and cast a vote for East Jordan. We are not at all disposed to find fault with the people of East Jordan for striving in all honorable ways to further the interest of their village, and there is nothing dishonorable in her offering herself as a candidate for county seat honors, by way of a compromise between the conflicting claims of the east and west ends of the county. But when the zeal of her citizens carries them to the length of bribery, and the colonization of voters to effect their object, it is full time to call a halt. Methods which would be branded as dishonorable in an ordinary political contest, are certainly no less dishonorable when employed in a contest for the county seat; and we have no doubt that all good citizens of Charlevoix, no matter what their preferences, will frown upon any efforts which may be made to defeat a fair expression of the people by any such means.—[Petoskey Record.

Books Received.

"Cottage Hearth" for April contains, besides the usual amount of short stories, poems, and domestic matter, an interesting paper on Westminster Abbey and the Tower of London, by Willis Boyd Allen. The article is finely illustrated and gives, in the form of an easy narrative, a full description of the venerable buildings recently attacked by the "Dynamiters" in London. The publishers have increased the number of pages, by the addition of a new department, devoted to correspondence about home gardening and general horticulture. This magazine is furnished with the JOURNAL one year for $2.25. See club list in another column.

"Proceedings of the second annual meeting of the Michigan state Pharmaceutical Association, held at Detroit, Sept. 9-11, 1884." This is a respectable looking volume of 228 pages exclusive of advertisements, and contains all the proceedings, discussions, and papers read at the second annual meeting. The book is handsomely printed, and will no doubt make a valuable addition to pharmaceutical literature.

"The Rock Worm" for March, containing gems from Longfellow. Monthly, 25 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

"Calendar of the University of Michigan" for 1884-5.

Historical Society.

The society were nicely entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard on Tuesday evening last. The commodious parlors being well filled. The following is the program.

Music, violin duet, Messrs. Wheat and Carr. Paper, "Lord Macaulay," by John Whitehouse, he did both subject and self much credit.

Music, vocal, Miss Winnie Bartholomew.

After intermission, Wheat and Carr admirably entertained the society with a violin duet.

Select reading by H. Lee Iddings. Music, guitar duet, by Miss Loveday and A. P. Washburn and was indeed fine.

The fine flight of sentiment as rendered by G. I. Wheat and Mrs. R. W. Kane, violin and organ, was grand.

The program closed with a trio by Mrs. Kane, Miss Nicholls and O. I. Wheat.

One of the Society's pleasantest evening was enjoyed by all. The regular order of business being completed the Society adjourned to meet in one week with Mr. and Mrs. Amos Fox, and a very interesting program is being prepared.

Boyne can depend on it, she will never get the county seat by first giving it to East Jordan.

Sap ran in protected places on Monday, although the snow is over two feet deep in the woods.

J. A. Hawkins returned home Saturday from Grand Rapids, where he has been at work this winter.

Last Friday morning the Beaver and Fox Islands looked to be only three or four miles distant.

Sims Baker has moved his tools to his farm, and will be prepared to do custom work for his friends.

One of the teachers of Antrim county walked six hundred and forty miles during a term or four months.

Leaving clothes on a line to dry over night affords no insurance that they will be there the next morning.

The board of registration of Charlevoix township will meet at the clerk's office on Saturday, April 4th, from 9 a. m., to 5 p. m.

It is said that the mail for Inwood has been carried by several times lately, the last time being entirely unnecessary, as the road was open and travelled.

Subject for discussion at the Congregational church next Sunday morning will be "Addition." These just entering christian work especially invited.

Preaching next Sunday morning at M. E. church by the pastor. Subject: "God and Man Joined in Work." Union service at 7 o'clock. All are invited.

Do you want an economical administration of your township officers? Then nominate and elect the men that will adopt and carry out such measures.

The county is undoubtedly able to build its own buildings, but are they ready? Buildings are now provided free, for a much less amount than the county can build.

Rev. C. F. Van Anken dedicated the new Congregational church at Bellaire last Sunday. A debt of $800 was provided for, and the church is clear of all incumbrance.

It is the current opinion in Charlevoix that the county seat will be removed but once, and when established, buildings will be erected, and everything done for permanence.

East Jordan talks with Boyne that the county seat will be passed around, but at home or in the southern tier of towns, when it goes to East Jordan it goes to stay. This is the manner of the men.

A weekly paper called "Inland Marine" has been started in Chicago, devoted, as its name indicates, to the marine interests of the great lakes. Published at 142 South Water street, Chicago, Illinois.

No business man can afford to write his business letters on a blank sheet of paper, or worse, one disfigured by a rubber dumb. It costs but little more to use first-class paper neatly printed and put up in tablets.

On Monday morning a daughter of S. B. Thatcher caught fire to her clothes, and in extinguishing it Mrs. Thatcher burned her hands very seriously. She will probably be laid up a week or more. The girl was not much injured.

On Monday morning Frank Hines' boy, aged two years, reached up to a table and took a bottle of carbolic acid, turning some of it into his right eye, down his cheek, and into his mouth, swallowing a little. Times were lively there for a few minutes, and the assistance of three physicians saved the boy's life, though they are yet unable to determine the extent of the injury to the eye.

Several young boys have been detected pilfering small articles from the counters of the Fair. Justice Mc Leod suspended judgment on promises never again to engage in the basi ness; and their names are withheld from publication for the same cause.

The residence of G. M. Johnson burned Monday afternoon, and with contents was a total loss. Mrs. Johnson was asleep, and Mr. Johnson was absent. The fire was discovered by some persons passing, whose prompt action probably saved her life.

James Martin has suffered all winter from a fractured ankle, received while attending the pier light late last fall. On Tuesday the bones were replaced and bandaged, and it is hoped that when the wound again heals he will be better able to walk than he has been.

The standard of dignity of the editorial profession is not raised any appreciable amount by the vigorous assaults of the Boyne Statesman upon the senior editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel. We believe, Phil, you damage your own cause more than you help it.

Charlevoix has a building that cost $7,000. Will the county stop at that amount? Will they not raise three or four times that amount, and get no better accommodations. Grand Traverse has expended $20,000 for jail alone. This county will not stop with a small amount.

The sentiment of the leading citizens of Charlevoix is that when the county seat is established at East Jordon, county buildings will be erected at once, and that it will never be removed. Charlevoix will vote to keep it at East Jordan, and the county will pay for the necessary buildings.

The propeller Michigan, which has been in the ice off Grand Haven nearly all winter, was crushed and sunk on Monday. The captain, mate, engineer and ten seamen left the boat but fifteen minutes before she went down, and with the help of a life boat reached the tug Arctic four miles distant.

A Harbor Springs dispatch to the Detroit Free Press says that C. W. Caskey and J. M. Barbeck have purchased the propeller A. C. Van Raalte owned by Smith Bros. at Cheboygan and rated B 1. She will be refitted and placed on the route between Harbor Springs and Manistique and will carry the Beaver Island mail.

Charlevoix cannot have any fear of losing her prestige as the metropolis of the county, in the light of experience. Elk Rapids lost nothing by the removal of the county seat to Bellaire, and Charlevoix will lose nothing by removal. But Charlevoix will hold the county seat as long as she can, and so would any other town.

We desire to suggest to our friends in the townships that they hold their caucuses several days in advance of election, thus giving them ample time to get their tickets and slips without compelling the printers to work nights and Sundays. Tickets and slips correctly printed at this office, on the shortest possible notice and at the usual rates.

E. S. Hawkes is dividing this week a fine bank case for the county treasurer, similar in workmanship and style to the judge's desk in the court room. Mr. Hawkes has also made a table for the council room. All this work is of ash trimmed with walnut in rich designs, and will be not only ornamental to the rooms occupied, but creditable to the builder.

A party of young folks disturbed the prayer meeting at the Ironton church last Sunday evening, and the next day complaint was made before Justice Sheldon, and each were fined five dollars and costs. They will doubtless be more moderate in their conduct hereafter. A repetition of the offense may cause names to appear in print.

Mr. A. W. Marks came up on Friday night with 12,000 trout fry for planting in this vicinity. There will be more to follow soon. Mr. Marks proposes to transform the basement of the Petoskey white fish hatchery into a hatchery for salmon trout, using for that purpose the overflow from the white fish jars. The experiments made at Paris in improving the breed of brook trout has been very satisfactory. Mr. Marks now has a cross between the brook and salmon trout which, retaining all the distinctive features of brook trout, is a much heavier and stockier fish. This cross (¾ brook and ¼ salmon trout) produces a fish from 1 to 1½ heavier at the same age than thorough breed speckled trout of our northern brooks. Mr. Marks contemplates stocking Crooked lake this season with wall eyed pike.—[Petoskey Record.

Captain Robinson, of the steamer Cummings, was here Saturday last, looking up a route for that steamer. Her route will be from Old Mission to Elk Rapids, Torch Lake, Northport, Sutton's Bay and Traverse City. We learn that she is a very fine steamer and makes her 12 and 13 miles an hour. She undoubtedly will make a fine boat for the trade and has speed enough to make the trip, and will be here upon the opening of navigation. A liberal patronage will be given her we'll warrant.—[Elk Rapids Progress.

Brown & Co., bankers have purchased the corner lot of E. H. Green, where his law office now stands, and will erect early this spring a two-story brick block for a bank and residence. E. H. Green contemplates the erection of a brick block adjoining, but has not yet decided upon plans. This is the beginning of a building boom which will make times lively in Charlevoix this summer. It is also the beginning of a boom to build up Bridge street with something substantial and permanent, and we are assured others will follow in the near future.

C. W. Caskey, of Harbor Springs, is negotiating with Charles R. Smith for the purchase of the propeller A. C. VanRaalte, and if he should purchase the boat, proposes to run her between Harbor Springs and Manistique, touching at Cross Village and Beaver Island. Mr. Smith made him an offer and Mr. Caskey is to be in town to-day to examine the boat, and if she is satisfactory the sale will be made at Mr. Smith's figures. The Van Raalto is rated B 1, by the underwriter's in scector and no better sea boat rides the lakes.—[Cheboygan Tribune.

OUR DEAD.

BY R. S. KELLER.

Too soon, too soon life's kisses fade and die;
Too soon it the sun of joy from human eye
Takes winged flight in gloom of sullen night,
To hide its glory tair from longing sight.

Too soon, too soon the sweets of love do sleep
In tomb oppressive, cut in all too deep
The vigils of a past, whose bright array
Could not endure the passage of a day.

Too soon, too soon the breath of loss on life
Will freeze, where tender words were want to Oh!
Mercy alone stops fancy as she flies,
And brings the loved ones back from paradise.

And now all, dearest in ages past,
Hath power to dart a pall in eyes erstwhile bright;
Into every act of blindness that are shed
All must see is fit sweet voices of our dead.

Margie's Locket.

BY JENNIE S. HUDSON.

"Stop a minute, fairy," cried Dick Langton, as Margie's tiny feet danced by. "Can't you stop long enough to see this birthday present I have brought?"

"A birthday present! Oh! Doctor Dick, do let me see it quick."

"Why so peaceful? Do birthdays bring inspiration?"

"Oh! never mind the poetry now, show me the present, please!"

"Did I say a present?" asked the young man, provokingly. "I fear I have made a mistake in the mode of expression. I should have said, 'Margie, my fair young friend, I have an article here for which you may desire to make me some exchange,' and then have awaited in silence your reply. Imagine me as awaiting it now."

"How provoking you are," said the young girl, with a bewitching pout, "to delude me into thinking you intended to present a gift, when really you only wanted to swap things."

"What do you say to kisses for an even exchange?" whispered Dick, slipping an arm about her willowy waist. "They are easily obtained, you know."

"Are they?" asked the mocking little witch, as she darted away. "Where do you propose getting them with so little trouble?"

"Very well," Dick calmly replied, replacing a jewel-case in his pocket and complacently surveying himself in the mirror opposite, "each one keeps his own, and I dare say mine is the best off of all."

"Will one kiss do, Doctor Dick? Just one?" asked Margie, stealing slowly toward him.

"Behold to what a skeleton her treatment has reduced me!" exclaimed Dick, addressing his image in the glass, "and all because I am not willing to barter my heart away for a mere trifle."

"Dear me! I am sorry," said Margie, with a laughing grace, raised rosy lips for the kiss.

One seal of the contract given, Dick, true to his promise, opened the case and displayed a handsomely wrought chain and locket.

"Oh! oh!" cried Margie, "is that really, truly for me? And is there a picture in the locket of you, Doctor Dick?"

"Yes, I had one inserted," he answered, teasingly, "for you to kiss and cry over when you go to boarding-school. Now, you are my little captive!" clasping the chain about her pearly neck, "and I shall not keep you in Germany, and you are at 'that horrid boarding-school,' you must let this slight bond sometimes remind you of your captor."

"Oh! Doctor Dick! dear Doctor Dick!" she cried, as, the locket all forgot, she threw her soft, white arms about his neck and nestled her golden head close to his warm young heart. "I cannot—cannot give you up. Why does Aunt Margaret let us go away, the only two she has to love her, her brother and her little ward? She will be so very lonely, and how unhappy we all will be apart."

"But, Margie," he answered, looking down sadly into the tearful, pleading eyes, "we must sacrifice our pleasure for the sake of an education; my profession is yet to be obtained, and your collegiate course to be gone through with. Only four years of separation, and then think of the happy meeting!"

"Four years!" sighed Margie. "I shudder when I think of it. It is an age, an eternity. Oh! Doctor Dick, cannot some change be made?"

"Hush, little one; dry your tears and go to show 'auntie' your locket. Our hearts will be heavy enough at parting; let us not anticipate that sorrow now."

"Perhaps I'll have a home of my own when you come back," laughed Margie that night, in answer to some saucy remark of Dick's.

"A home of your own," queried that young man, an unmistakable frown on his brow.

"Of course; isn't it often customary for young girls to marry when they leave school?" was the innocent response.

"Oh!" coolly, "now I understand, Shall I bring my little German wife to call?"

A startled glance showed Dick that his naughty question had hit its mark, and, with an exultant laugh, he caught Margie in his arms, saying:

"Promise me, little one, that no home but mine shall ever be yours, and I will promise you, by all that is true, that no other lassie shall ever hold your place in my heart."

And Margie gladly promised.

Four years and a half! and what changes had been wrought!

Dear Aunt Margaret had left her earthly home for one that was far more fair; "Doctor Dick" was far away over the treacherous sea, and Margie sat alone in her splendid room, gazing with mournful eyes out into the thickening dusk.

Her thoughts were on the happy past, and sadly she compared the love which surrounded her then to the indifferent courteous coldness bestowed by the distant relatives whose home was hers upon her now.

"Doctor Dick has forgotten me quite," she thought; "his long silence gives sufficient proof of that. Alice and her mother only care for my presence here on account of my wealth; Aunt Margaret is dead to me forever, and I am indeed alone. My heart cries out for affection, why should a mere childish promise debar me its warmth, its balm? I will no longer delay; Donald Draxton shall have his answer to-night."

No queen ever bore a more regal presence than Margie, as robed in shining satin, diamonds gemming her hair, her arms, her breast, she stood alone that evening in an alcove of the library, her hands pressed to her heart, while its glad refrain, "He is here, he is here," made music in her ears.

"I am sure I saw her enter this room," she heard her cousin Alice say, "so I will leave you to your fate. But make your solitudes brief, Dr. Langton, as I shall call for you in a very short time."

Was it possible that this handsome, well-developed man advancing toward Margie could be the merry, lavish "Doctor Dick" of four years agone? How could she longer doubt when both her hands were clasped in his, and he cried, "Margie, Margie, have I found you at last? is this indeed my little Margie?"

Almost so sure as this is Doctor Dick," was the joyous response, as she lifted sweet, welcome eyes to his, all remembrance of the sad six months of silence blotted out.

"Do you know what a weary, cruel search I have had for you?" he asked. "Twas the merest chance that revealed to me your whereabouts. Why have you sent me no address?"

"Yes, and in enigmas," Margie answered proudly, withdrawing her hands from his. "Why should I have thrust my address upon you when my last two letters have met with no response?"

"Letters?" he exclaimed. "I have looked in vain for letters from you. After the news of my sister's death I left Paris, very ill, and was ordered to travel, went to Norway, where I wrote time and again not only to you, but to your solicitor, but all to no avail. A month ago I came to America and since then I have sought you everywhere. A few days since I chanced upon your name in the society notes of tiniority's paper, and straightway I came as fast as steam would bear me to see and talk with you once more. And now," eagerly, "tell me all about yourself, and why this cruel silence has occurred."

"No time now for an interchange of confidences," laughed Alice, as with Margie's arm in a shower of flowers, "for you are chosen leader of the german, Dr. Langton, and Mr. Draxton is looking for Margie."

"A handsome pair!" remarked Mr. Draxton, as, after a moment's gay parley, Dr. Langton and Alice moved away. "I suppose you have learned, Miss Margie, the romantic story of their summer tour through Switzerland, and its happy result. It has been known for some time that Dr. Langton was Miss Alice's fiance, but I have never seen him until to-night."

Had a goblet of living water been held to Margie's lips only to be rudely dashed away? A moment before she would have sworn that the words, "My little Margie," uttered so caressingly, had sprung from a heart full of love for her alone, but now, oh heaven!—the bitter pain she long had known was lurking in her heart again, and this cruel certainty was harder to bear than her former suspense.

Dr. Langton's eyes followed her from afar all evening, only to see her surrounded by a group of admirers, and prominent among them the handsome figure of Donald Draxton.

Missing her once, he sought the conservatory, hoping to find her there, when these low fragments of a conversation were borne to his ear:

"Margie," said a voice he recognized as that of Donald Draxton, "I beg of you to listen to me once again. I can but feel sure that the decision you gave me a year ago was not the same you would have given me to-night. Was she more likely to forget than you?

"Why after day," he communed with himself, "have I waited for some slight but positive clew to her answer to Draxton on that eventful night. Day after day I have borne tortures in silence, but this morning the climax was reached when the necklace once so cherished was tauntingly left at my feet. And now Margie's lips and not her manner shall decide my fate for me."

But what sound was this breaking upon the stillness? He raised a startled glance, and there, as if in answer to his thoughts, he saw Margie advancing toward him.

She was quite oblivious to his presence, and walked with a slow and meditating air.

All pride had left her beautiful face, The lashes heavy with unshed tears, the droop of the lovely lips, lent a child-like grace to her perfect features, and as Dr. Langton gazed at her all trace of resentment left his heart.

"Margie," he quietly said. "Do not be alarmed," noting her look of startled fear. "I had hoped to have an interview with you to-day; chance has aided me. May I speak now?"

A look of proud, quick pain met his learning glance, as she replied, "Dr. Langton, I may be familiar with all you have to say. Rumor sometimes forestalls the deepest confidences. Permit me to offer you my prayers for the trouble of communication.

"Rumor?" with pained intentness. "What can you mean? Margie, I fear I have borne a terrible weight of suspense for the past few days, but I did not know I had so worn my heart upon my sleeve that others had noted and commented upon it."

"I referred," coldly, "to your engagement with my cousin, Alice Langton."

"My engagement with Alice!" exclaimed Dick, a proud light breaking in upon him; "are you dreaming, Margie? A Dr. Langley is your cousin's choice; but, natural as it is for mistake, how could you think I could so easily forget a promise made to a beautiful, golden-haired child who laid nestled in my utmost heart?"

Had she, then, been cruelly mistaken? Was the light breaking in for her, too? Too long agitated to speak, she turned her radiant face away; but this restless suitor would brook no silence.

"Margie," he cried, "why do you not speak?" Then, seizing her unresisting hand, he added, impetuously: "One thing you will tell me straightway, for you will not bear this torture of suspense another hour. Has Donald Draxton a claim upon your heart? Oh! darling," with indrawn breath, "how could I bear to give you up?"

Margie lifted a shy, happy glance to his and whispered, "Do you forget that someone else had made a promise, too? Was she more likely to forget than you?"

Her words, he cried, as he clasped her close to his breast, "have you then loved me all the while? My heart was torn with anguish because I thought you had left me."

"Doctor Dick, may I have my locket back?" was Margie's shame-faced request a few days later, "for I am sure I can face that twice-to-night has rested there. Darling, you are lonely; can you not trust your happiness to my keeping? My love is ——"

"Mr. Draxton," came a low voice a moment later, "you are my dear friend, the one whom most of all I trust. Shall I ——" And that was all, no farther clew was given to the answer which his hope of happiness troubled.

A pallid face, he scarcely knew as his own, confronted him in a mirror as he turned to leave the room. And when Margie met him a half-hour later all the old lovely brightness had fled from his manner, leaving him a coldly elegant man of the world.

A thin veil of reserve grew up between the two after that, as slight and intangible as the cobweb which barred the enchanted princess from freedom, and as difficult to breathe through.

Margie grew paler as a week wore on, and a passion of pain often filled her lovely eyes as she saw Alice and Dr. Langton constantly together.

One day, at a gay May-day gathering, her temper broke beneath the strain so ruthlessly imposed upon it.

In passing under some low-drooping boughs her necklace was caught, and all her efforts to extricate it proved vain.

"Permit me to unfasten the chain for you, Miss Margie," said Donald Draxton, springing to the rescue.

"Do not hesitate to break the links, Mr. Draxton; the chain has been so long a source of annoyance that I will gladly be freed from its hateful fetters."

"Oh! that mysterious chain," laughed Alice, "locked and the key lost. Would not some absent lover be rejoiced to know that you were compelled to wear his picture night and day?"

"I fear I shall hurt you if I break the links," said Donald. "Is there no other way?"

"I have no such tender scruples, Mr. Draxton, provided Miss Stratton can easily be relieved from what she terms those 'hateful fetters,'" said Dr. Langton, as, with a white, set face, and a stilled "permit me," he wrenched the chain in two.

Margie turned swiftly away, and the glittering gold of the necklace shone on the green sward below.

"I shall appropriate it temporarily," said Dr. Langton, and, stooping hastily, he picked up the chain and attached it to his vest, with the jesting remark, "There! Miss Alice, you can not consider it immensely becoming?"

An hour later he had left the gay company and strolled away in the woods. There he gave himself up to painful thought.

"Pay after day," he communed with himself, "have I waited for some slight but positive clew to her answer to Draxton on that eventful night. Day after day I have borne tortures in silence, but this morning the climax was reached when the necklace once so cherished was tauntingly left at my feet. TWO HUNDRED LIVES

Crushed or Asphyxiated in a German Colliery.

Less than Two Score of the 219 Diggers Accounted For.

[By cable from Berlin.]

At the mining district of Camphausen, near Saarbruck, in Rhenish Prussia, a fearful explosion occurred early this morning. Just before daybreak the last of the day shift of men had gone down in the cages of one of the largest mines. Everything was reported in order, though reports of fire-damp in two of the levels had somewhat disturbed the superintendent, still, the continuing operations roaring through the main shaft was in perfect order, and no catastrophe was feared. The men, in talking their safety lamps, had been specially warned to be careful. After a while the cages began to descend, coming to the surface. The 219 men who had gone down were at work, and all was well. At 6:30 a terrific rumbling shook the earth. A flash of flame leaped up the shaft and a volume of stifling smoke poured out. This was followed by the crashing of timbers and the tumbling of earth down the shaft. From all quarters men and women came running to the mouth of the pit. There are fifteen thousand employed in the Camphausen coal-fields, and a quarter of an hour a crowd of five thousand men and as many women and children, the latter shrieking and wringing their hands for mine. As soon as the heavy smoke had cleared away enough to see down into the cages, but they would not move. The force of the retain draught at the pit's mouth told that an explosion had shattered the ventilating engine. Still the ventilating engine was kept going. It might do some good. It was thought from a first glance that no after fire had followed, and this may prove correct. Volunteers were called for to descend. A temporary cable was rigged, and six brave men went down to save their fellows. On reaching the uppermost drift they heard voices calling and signaled to stop. Thirty men were there in a state of terror and semi-stupefaction from the fire-damp still pervading the galleries. These men were brought to the surface alive.

The rescuers and the rescued were greeted with shouts of delight as they came in parties to the surface. The thousands of women and children gave way to tears. The main difficulty now began. There were still fifty men in the mine whose chance of life was ebbing away at every instant. Doubtless many of them had been killed instantly by the fire-damp, the falling gas, and others had been smothered shortly after before they could retreat to the main shaft. The volunteers went down again, but their progress soon was stopped. The shaft had been filled with rocks and earth shaken out by the blasts. Only a few of the rescuers came again with the entombed men were fruitless. Some of the men thought they smelt the fire, but as yet no definitely settled. There was only one way to reach the unfortunates, in the direction of descending the shaft. This news spread despair over Camphausen. At once work was begun with a will. Hundreds volunteered for duty, and the offer of hundreds were availed of. The work was progressed with relentless and dangerous. At every removal of the displaced rocks and timbers there was danger of a fresh caving in of the sides. After eight hours work a lower level was reached, and there carefully bodies were found around the shaft. Suffocation had evidently quickly ended their struggle. The bodies of the air-shaft left them at the mercy of the poisonous after-damp. The search went on. The level of the third drift was reached and in close proximity to the shaft. In all ninety-two bodies were brought to the surface before night. The work still goes on. There are still ninety-seven men in the pit. It is feared that all are dead, but the strong Prussians with hopeful hearts are working on by the light of great fires and amid the wails of the women waiting around the mine for their dead.

GIVING HIM THE GRIP.

Albert Victor Joins the Masons and Is Put Through the Mill.

[By cable from London.]

The dignity and traditional grandeur of Freemasonry was largely vindicated and illustrated when last night, in the Royal Alpha Lodge, in the presence of a large company of Masons, Prince Edward, heir presumptive to the English throne, was initiated by the Prince of Wales, his father, heir apparent, Grand Master, and at the same time a working Mason, in the office of Worshipful Master. The lodge was private, and its working dates from 1722. It has by-laws of the Royal Alpha restricting the number of members to thirty-three, merely all officers or past officers of the Grand Lodge of England. Also the purpose is that no visitor can be received enables the work to be carried out in the presence of lodge members only. Will Brown, Baron St. Johns Palace, was the meeting-place. The lodge was laid out in a first-floor apartment, garnished with fine portraits in oil of Past Royal Grand Masters, Worshipful Masters and Wardens. There were chairs in gold embossedly decorated and other appointments in keeping. The Prince of Wales took the Worshipful Master's chair, donning above his Grand Master's clothing the black apron of a working Mason, the pendant being the instrument which forms the mide and proves the perfect mean and square. Also a member of the arts and sciences. All the officers wore the blue collar of working members of the speculative craft over pauple and gold fringed Lodge officership pendants in silver, the centers being works of art in enamel with mps studded with diamonds.

The candidate was prepared in an adjoining room for the ceremony. The craft does not admit illiterate persons, and the first act required of a seeker after Masonic knowledge is to prove himself capable of entering upon the study of the liberal arts. The Prince was then admitted with full solemnity within the portals in the manner which all after the craft. The ceremony was performed with all the grace and dignity which characterize the Grand Master and his officers, all skilled craftsmen, and all noblemen or titled persons. When the ceremony was ended but the young Prince was seated in the place of honor and witnessed such work as is required of the first degree. The lodge being closed in due form after its labors, the members adjourned to a banquet, where the initiate, sitting next the Worshipful Master according to ancient custom, received the congratulations of his elders.

MUST "DO TIME."

Judge Blodgett Imposes Sentence on Messrs. Mackin and Gallagher.

They Go to the Penitentiary for Two Years and Pay a Fine of $5,000 Each.

[Chicago telegram.]

Two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary and a fine of $5,000 was the sentence which Judge Blodgett imposed upon Mackin and Gallagher, convicted of conspiracy to tamper with the returns of an election in the Second Precinct of the Eighteenth Ward. The case of Glessen, convicted of a like offense, was not considered, and the probabilities are that he will be let off with a nominal sentence.

After listening to arguments by prisoners' counsel urging a new trial, the Judge ordered the defendants to come forward, and Deputy Marshal Jones, who had taken a stand behind Mackin while the colloquy between the attorneys was going on, gave the chief defendant a little push, at which Mr. Mackin looked very angry. His face assumed its usual expression of defiance, however, and he marched up to the judge's seat, followed by Gallagher, who was undoubtedly the calmer of the two. As they stood facing the Judge, a physicians could of the causes of a Lawler could not have told what passed in their thoughts, so perfectly had they themselves under self-control. The Judge never glanced at them, but read rapidly from a paper which he had prepared while the arguments were not yet finished:

"The sentence and judgment of the court is that you, Joseph C. Mackin, and you, William J. Gallagher, be now remanded to the custody of the United States Marshal, and that that officer of the court convey you to the penitentiary at Joliet, within the period of ten days, to remain there committed, each of you, for the term of two years, and that each of you pay a fine of $5,000."

There was a dead silence in the room when the Judge ceased speaking. The defendants never flinched. Mackin heaved a consumptive breath, but his face did not move. His eyes were almost completely hidden by his shaggy brows. Gallagher looked straight ahead, as if he saw clear through the stern Judge, through the massive wall, and out into freedom, which had been shut out from him for the last two years.

"The punishment does not commence," Judge Blodgett broke the silence, "until the defendants reach the penitentiary. There are ten days till then, during which the defendants may be released on bail. Mackin and Gallagher, you are remanded to the custody of the Marshal, and will be accessible for any legal steps which you may take in the kind ever directed, but no being entirely free from the baneful features of other cough mixtures. Every one will find it a safe, sure cure. It is merely free from opiates, poisons and narcotics, as demonstrated by the analyses of constituted medical authorities, it may justly be termed a valuable discovery.

We concur in the official opinion of the commissioner of Health of Baltimore, that it happily supplants the objectionable and at times exceedingly harmful features of other cough mixtures."

"We Have Used It."

To the Public:

From personal experience, as well as from observation of its market efficacy in other cases that have come under our notice, we cheerfully recommend Red Star Cough Cure as a safe and reliable family medicine.

Combining the power to relieve and cure promptly, with the rare quality of being entirely free from opiates, poisons and narcotics, as demonstrated by the analyses of constituted medical authorities, it may justly be termed a valuable discovery.

We concur in the official opinion of the Commissioner of Health of Baltimore, that it happily supplants the objectionable and at times exceedingly harmful features of other cough mixtures."

JOHN CHARLES BLACK.

Appointed Commissioner of Pensions.

John Charles Black, the new Commissioner of Pensions, was born at Lexington, Mo., in January, 1839. He received an academic education, and graduated at Wabash College, Ind. A short time afterward he entered the army in the Twenty-third Illinois Regiment, where he left it in 1865 he held the rank of Brevet Brigadier General. His next step was to prepare for the profession of the bar. He entered the office of a prominent firm in Chicago for this purpose, and in due time was admitted to the practice of his profession. His home is at Danville, Ill.

General Black has been active in politics as a Democrat, and has been frequently nominated for office. Several times he was nominations for Congress, the last only last fall, have maintained his prominence of the party struggles, and are reminiscent of the respect in which his ability is held. Gen. Black was the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor in 1872, and when Gen. Logan was sent to the Senate in 1879 Black was the Democratic caucus nominee. He was a delegate at large to the last Democratic National Convention, before which an attempt was made to put him in nomination for the Vice Presidency, which he prevented.

Room for Immigration.

With advancing spring the railroad companies of the West are preparing for the immigration of 1885, which bids fair to assume enormous proportions. The question naturally arises in the minds of those unacquainted with the country as to where so many people are to find settlement. Years ago the alarm was sounded that the available limits of the great West had been reached, that the agricultural lands were about all taken, and that all that lay beyond was a rainless region, fit only as uncertain grazing grounds for the venturesome herder and shepherd. But the settler has kept steadily encroaching upon the boundaries of this vast region until he has finally pushed his corn and wheat fields into the very center of the mythical Great American Desert, expelling the theories of the explorer and spoiling the map of the geography.

The Government lands of Dakota have been rapidly disappearing until all of the free lands south of the forty-sixth parallel are for the most part confined to the counties of Campbell, McPherson, Walworth, Potter, and the recently opened Cheyenne River Reservation. These comprise some of the finest and most productive lands to be found in the great valley of the Missouri, and the present season will no doubt see the entry of the last available acre in South Dakota, lying east of the Missouri River. However, this will be far from exhausting Dakota's homes for the poor. The Mouse River District in the north is itself a State in extent of territory, of wheat lands excelled by neither the Red nor the Jim River valleys, while in the Black Hills region are to be found some of the most fertile valleys in the whole West.

Northwestern Nebraska, which is best reached by the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, is the latest scope of country opened to settlement by railway construction, and the inducements are that within the coming eighteen months but little of the Government lands in the vicinity of that part of the road will remain unclaimed. But it is many miles from the Wyoming line to the mountains be reached, and so many as the lands of the Government domain prove to be productive so long will settlers, in thousands, continue to flock to this rich and fertile section of the West.

Agreeable to Everybody.

Col. Robert G. King, for ten years Deputy Collector Internal Revenue, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I endorse the Red Star Cough Cure. I have used it in my family and find it very effective, and every patient. Its use was entirely free from the depressing effects of other cough remedies. It can be taken at any time, suffering anxiety or inconvenience to business. Now that my joints were swollen, and were very painful, I was detained at home unable to attend to business. Now that I am about as much as usual, suffering anxiety and unable to attend to business. Now that I am about as much as usual, suffering anxiety and unable to attend to business. Liquor Adulteration.

At a Manhattan Temperance meeting in New York, Major C. B. Cotton, Vice President of the American Temperance Society, said:

"I manufactured liquor for twenty five years. I began the liquor business selling beer over my father's bar when I was fifteen years old. I know all about it and can make any kind. The adulteration of liquor is something of it will surprise you. A man stands you know little about and the extent about as good chance of being struck by lightning as to get a pure article of brandy in New York. With rectified whiskey as a basis we can imitate any kind of brandy. The French are more expert than we are; we begin where they leave off, and God pity the man who drinks the stuff we make. We make champagne which you buy for the genuine article. It costs, to manufacture it, four dollars a basket; we sell it for ten dollars to dealers. We make the stuff and put it in as genuine, import Spanish corks for the bottles and French straw and baskets to pack them in. We buy one barrel of it. Our cooper takes the pattern and makes ours by it. They are new and bright. We put them through a staining process and they come out old and rusty and worn, just like the genuine importation. Thirty-two deadly poisons are used in the manufacture of wine. Not one gallon in fifty sold here ever saw France. We send thousands of gallons of whisky to France to have them come back to us something else. Of all the poisonous liquors in the world Bourbon whiskey is the deadliest. Strychnine is only one of the poisons in it. A certain oil is used in its manufacture, eight drops of which will kill a cat in eight minutes, and a dog in nine minutes. The most temperate men in New York are the wholesale dealers. They dare not drink the stuff they sell."

The Liquor Traffic.

The Louisville Courier-Journal says of the liquor traffic:

It is a business which is opposed to every clergyman in the country.

It is a business which every merchant and business man hates and detests.

It is a business which is the standing dread of every mother.

It is a business which makes ninety per cent of the pauperism for which the tax-payer has to pay.

It is a business which makes ninety per cent of the business in the criminal courts.

It is a business which keeps employed an army of policemen in the cities.

It is a business which puts out the fire on the hearth, and condemns wives and children to hunger, cold and rags.

It is a business which fosters vice for profit and educates in wickedness for gain.

Drunkenness comprises all other vices. It is the dictionary of vice, for it includes every vice.

Drunkenness means pecualtion, theft, robbery, arson, forgery, murder; for it leads to all these crimes.

"No License" Reform.

A western journal has the following very practical remarks for those who cannot get along without frequent whiskiees:

Liquor dealers pay on an average $2 per gallon for whiskey. One gallon contains an average of sixty-five drinks at ten cents a drink, and the poor man pays $6.50 per gallon for his whiskey. In other words, he pays $2 for his whiskey and $4.50 to the man for handing it over the bar. Make your wife your bar-keeper. Lend your wife $2 to buy a gallon of whiskey for a beginning, and every time you want a drink go and pay ten cents for it. By the time you drink a gallon she will have $6.50, or enough to refund the $2 borrowed from you, to pay for another gallon of whiskey, and a balance of $2.50. She will be able to conc'uct future operations on her own capital, and when you become an inebriate, unable to support yourself, shunned and despised by all respectable persons, your wife will have money enough to keep you until you get ready to fill a drunkard's grave.

The Chicago Weekly News

AND THE

Charlevoix Journal

ONE YEAR

For $2.00

THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is now an eight-page, sixty-four-column paper. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. Its eight broad, long pages present each week a mass of closely selected matter, containing much to suit each of the varying tastes of the family circle. First and foremost it gives ALL THE NEWS, complete as to details, yet concise in form. Its connection with the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS (member of the Associated Press) gives it facilities for news gathering unsurpassed by any journal in the country. Its MARKET REPORTS are specially complete and thoroughly trustworthy. For Insular matter it is given to agriculture and home matters. Every issue contains SIX COMPLETED STORIES, and a regular installment of an original story by some well-known English or American author, exclusively secured for the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. Condensed notes on fashions, art, industries, literature, science, etc., etc., appear regularly.

Few papers in the country are so extensively quoted by the press in general for its bright and humorous paragraphs as the Chicago Daily News. These are all reproduced in the WEEKLY NEWS. In its editorial expression the paper speaks from the standpoint of the INDEPENDENT journalist, thereby escaping the temptation to support or condone the questionable under the pressure of party allegiance. Mere partisan extremists will not like it, the fair minded and thoughtful of all parties will appreciate and value its candid statements of facts and conclusions, all calculated to qualify the reader for the formation of his own intelligent opinion. The political events of the year to come promise to assume such a character that a thoroughly truthful and impartial record becomes all-important rather than a partisan one, colored and perverted to individual liking.

In all its departments the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS aims to present an entertaining, impartial and entertaining family newspaper of the very highest grade.

WHAT OLD SUBSCRIBERS SAY

When they Renew their Subscriptions.

William Cantone, Pontiac, Oakland County, Mich., says: "I think it is the best paper in Oakland county."

Jacob Yerick, Sullivan, O., says: "It is better than many of the 82 papers."

James F. Minner, Ed. Pi. Clarion screen, New Orleans, La., says: "In consenting your paper with extra premium for the last year, the Chicago Weekly News, I did not know what I was doing. I thought it was only a number of the Canvas Builder, and so even to all accounts to the name."

Alfred P. Burt, Wood all, Henry County, Illinois, says: "It is one of the cleanest papers published."

W. C. Rhodes, Adrian, Mich., says: "I don't want to miss a number. It is the best paper for news I have ever seen."

Peter Lang, Jr., Cedar Saunders County, Neb., says: "I find the WEEKLY NEWS to be full of reading matter of about every description. In my opinion it is worth more than the price charged to subscribers. Give it to the republican party because it is not controlled by the monopolies."

W. E. Dawson, Parker, S. D., says: "It is the cheapest and best paper I ever read."

Mrs. L. S. Sherman, Hannibal, Mo., says: "I like your paper very much. I get no other paper, for do not like them as well as the WEEKLY NEWS."

Mich. Lee, Marshall, Tex., says: "I am highly pleased with the NEWS, for I get politics, religion, literature and news in a nutshell. Each issue of the seven is to my mind worth more than five dollars. Success to the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS and five dollars' worth of it to every family."

Its size and character considered, the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is the cheapest weekly in America—ONE DOLLAR A YEAR, postage included. Our special Clubbing Terms bring it within the reach of all our subscribers. Specimen copies may be seen at this office.

The Snow Angel.

The sleigh-bells danced that Winter night;
Old Earth lifted up each icy face with glee;
The windows overflowed with light;
Joy rioted on earth and Christmas tree.
But to one the bells and mirth were naught;
He said with deeper joy was fraught.
He waited until the guests were gone;
He waited to dream his dream alone;
And the night wore on.

Alone he stands in the silent night;
He piles the snow in the village square;
With spade for chisel, a statue white
From the crystal quarry rises fair.
No light, save the stars, to guide his hand
But the image obeys his soul's command.
The sky is draped with frosty lawn,
The stars grow pale in the early dawn,
But the lad toils on.

And he! In the morn the people come
To gaze at the wondrous vision there;
And they called it "The Angel," divining its name,
For it came in silence and unaware.
It seemed no mortal hand had wrought
The purified face of pure celestial thought:
But the footsteps wasted beneath the sun:
He like went out ere the day was done,
And the lad dreamed on.

And his dream was this: In the years to be
I will carve the Angel in lasting stone;
In another land, beyond the sea,
I will toil in darkness, will dream alone;
While others sleep I will find a way
Up through the night to the light of day.
There's nothing to wrest beneath star or sun
Which patient genius has not won,
And the boy toils on.

The years go by. He has wrought with might;
He has gained renown in the land of art;
But the thought inspired that Christmas night
Still keeps its place in the sculptor's heart;
And the dream of the boy, that one fled away
In the light of the sun that Winter day,
Is embodied at last in enduring stone,
Snow Angel in marble—his purpose won;
And the man toils on.

—Wallace Bruce in Harper's Magazine for January.

STRANGE MASHES.

Men Who Have Been Annoyed by Women.

A GIRL'S QUEER DREAM.

Charles Crocker, when Superintendent of the Central Pacific Railroad, long before he became wealthy, used to be annoyed by a young girl living in Sacramento, who visited his office daily—their office then being in the city—looked in at him, smiled and walked out. At last it became so annoying he had one of his clerks ask her her errand.

"I dreamt three times he was to marry me, and in my dream I was told I was to visit him daily until he spoke, but he does not seem to speak!"

And he never did speak.

DE YOUNG AND HIS BLONDE.

Charles De Young, who was shot by young Kalloch in 1880, was singularly affected by the appearance of a blonde woman, especially if she wore glasses. He kept this fact from his family, and even his brother Michael, who was recently wounded by young Adolph Spreckels, was not aware of the fact at the time of the shooting of his brother.

Charles De Young, in 1871, was passing the Latter Exchange, and had turned into California street. It was just dusk. A young woman, with blonde hair and glasses, stopped him.

"Are you superstitious?" she inquired, her eyes flashing and in excitement.

De Young, who was naturally a brave man, replied although a little nervous at this interruption:

"No, why?"

"Because there is a curse hanging to you for sending Halpin to an untimely grave, and I am going to follow you to the end of the earth."

Halpin was a forger who had committed suicide, and De Young had a strange presentiment after meeting this woman that a great evil was to befall him, and he never saw a blonde with glasses that he did not scrutinize her keenly to see if she was his promised Nemesis.

A HUSBAND AND MILLIONAIRE.

In 1868, Capt. John C. Carter, United States Navy, was in charge of the Lighthouse Department of the Pacific Coast, and was sitting in his cozy office on Montgomery street, enjoying his morning pipe, when a gentleman entered in a hurry, confused and excited.

"Commodore! have you a cutter, a steam launch or a small-sized frigate, that I can get to the Sandwich Islands?" said the visitor, approaching the old Southern gentleman and looking him in the eye.

The Captain, who was a genuine gentleman, one of the First Families of Virginia, and appreciated a joke as well as the next one, thought his visitor was joking, and said:

"I can get you a Chinese junk, if that will suit you?"

"No, no, Commodore; I am in earnest, or rather, I should say, I want to get away for a week, or a few days."

"What's the matter?" queried the old naval officer, who was now assured his visitor was in earnest.

"Well, I am annoyed to death by a woman who claims that I am her husband and that I have $1,000,000 in the Bank of California belonging to her."

The visitor was Ralston, the cashier of the Bank of California, who so unfortunately ended his life a few years later.

DE WERTE CHINESE POETRY.

A prominent author of Chinese poetry, of whom more jokes are told than of any other living writer, was annoyed for many months by a daughter of a Chinese tea merchant, on Kearney street, writing him Chinese poetry that would destroy the appetite of a cannibal. It was annoying, and, as he had no ambition to assume the responsibilities of a Mongolian wife, even if the idea was Celestial, he made up his mind to find out how she had become smitten with him and what was her intention. So he called upon Ding Lung, and asked him if he knew his daughter was inditing him poetry.

"Positly belly good!"

"Yes, I am aware of that, but I mean what does Miss Lung write to me for?"

"Alle same Melican girl: she belly glood girl!"

"Yes, my dear sir, but I cannot comprehend how I have interested her: I never met her."

"Allee same Ah Sin, he washee you, she see you washee. She glood girl: she glow to Sunday school."

He saw it was like trying to discover the whereabouts of the Pillar of Salt, so he gave the matter up, only to ascertain that a Chinese laundrymen had found a piece of poetry in his vest pocket, which he brought to Sunday school for her to decipher, and she playfully had attempted to imitate it, and sent her imitations to him, hoping he would reply. She was only 12 years of age.—Philadelphia Press.

How to Save the Forests.

The New York press and a large portion of the people of that State are making a vigorous fight for the preservation of the forests in the Adirondack Mountains. These woods cover many square miles in the northern part of the State, harboring a vast amount of choice game; the lakes and streams furnish the best of fishing, and tourists and hunters are numerous over the favorite routes and at the resorts in their interior recesses. In these forests, also, are the sources of the streams which form the head waters of Mohawk river, Hudson river and Lake George. The trees are being rapidly slaughtered by lumbermen and woodchoppers, and careless hunters leave or scatter their campfires so that immense conflagrations are often caused, killing the timber and burning the vegetable hold which gives richness to the soil.

As the mountains and valleys are denuded of their forest growth, the sun and wind dry up the marshes and springs in which the streams had their sources and the lakes are drained of their contents. This loss of supply is causing a shrinkage of the rivers, and as the Mohawk furnishes the water for a long level of the Erie Canal, that thoroughfare is likely to suffer from the drouth, which the disappearance of the forests will create. The Hudson will also suffer, its upper waters becoming unnavigable, and its wharves, built to accommodate shipping at high water, falling into uselessness.

Most of these evils are nearly anticipatory, as they are in all sections of the country where natural forests, which protect the sources of the water supply and temper the climate, are being rapidly destroyed for lumber. Even in a prairie State, like Illinois, many streams which were well known and of good size in pioneer times have dried away and disappeared, because the woods and marshes at their sources have been cleared up. Such timbered States as Michigan and Wisconsin are witnessing similar effects to a greater degree. Sentimentalists have regarded this destruction of the forests as something in the nature of a crime, and have invented a word "carboricide" to stigmatize it in accordance with the evils of which it is the cause. How it is to be prevented is a problem. The States can hardly enact forest laws similar to the game laws, and the general Government has no jurisdiction over land which has been sold to private or corporate owners. Public sentiment is insufficient to restrain the greed of lumbermen and those intent on getting rapidly rich. If the present lumber cut should be limited, the lumbermen would get more profit out of it, and the reserve forests would become far more valuable. But there seems to be no effective way, either by legal enactment or by agreements among owners of timbered land, to limit the lumbering enterprises by which the country is being left naked and deprived of its greatest value.—Chicago Journal.

Physical Perfection of Polynesians.

All writers agree that physically the Polynesians are among the finest living races on the globe. Their average height is about three inches greater than that of Europeans, and their limbs are shapely and muscular. The men are rather superior to the women, who, though attractive in childhood, incline to grow too stocky at maturity. Their complexion varies from an almost European fairness to a dark brown, with occasionally a yellow or olive tint. The head bears a heavy crop of hair, which is usually black, with a tendency to curl. The growth is small on the face and other parts of the body, and is carefully plucked out. The nose is apt to be long and aquiline, but degenerates by a fullness at the extremity. The mouth is well shapen and displays teeth of a pearly whiteness. The shape of the head differs little from that of Europeans. The wide range of physical variation which has been noticed among these islanders, which at first view suggests mixture of race, is disputed, and the infrequent commingling between its parts. Only on the border of Melanesia are we to find a mixture of races.—American Antiquarian.

FIGHTING IN THE DESERT.

Sir. Graham's Troops March Up Hasheen's Hills and Then March Down Again.

Orderly Retreat of the British After "Winning" a Stubborn Fight by a Square.

The British forces at Suakim started on a reconnaissance March 20. On reaching the hills near Hasheen, the Arabs rushed from ambush and got within ten yards of the British line before the latter assumed regular firing. Lieut. O'Connor and four men were killed, and Capt. Ash was speared through the shoulder. Twenty-four soldiers were wounded, but the Arab retired.

Gen. Graham telegraphs as follows: We moved out at 7 o'clock this morning, leaving the Shropshire Regiment to guard it. On reaching the first hill, at 9 o'clock, we found that the enemy had in force and occupied another hill a mile and a quarter distant. After a short halt the Berkshire regiment and marines were ordered to clear the hill, the Indian contingent and Guards acting as support. This they drove very effectually, the enemy being run off the ridge, and streaming south and East and were charged by squadrons of Indian lancers in the bush. The cavalry pursued toward the Usurebs. Many of the enemy passed the Guards at the foot of the hill and made for a hill west of mine. Laid over. The Commissioner of Agriculture of some remarks made on the 20th by Mr. Van Wyck concerning the expenses of the South American Commission, and, after debate, a resolution was passed directing the official reporter to republish the proceedings of the previous day. During the discussion Mr. Teller made a spirited defense of his course as Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Frye reported a resolution from the Committee on Rules directing that committee to prepare an official seal for the Sena e of the United States. Laid over. The Senate then went into executive session, and when the doors reopened adjourned.

WHEN Vice-President Hendricks took his seat in the Senate, on the 22d inst., there was an absence of much interest. The President pro tem. asked the Chaplain to proceed with prayer, but the only heads present to bow were those of Miller of California, Logan of Illinois, Sawyer of Wisconsin, and Vest of Missouri. After the usual hour before the reading of the journal was completed a motion was made to adjourn, but Mr. Hoar moved a longer session, which prevailed and the motion was withdrawn. Senator Hoar then entered a motion to proceed to take up the deck of Mr. Hendricks a seat, which was the executive Mansion, containing the following to be Envoys Extra-ordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States: Edward J. Saville, of Maryland, now on the retired list, to be a Second Assistant Engineer on the retired list. These were confirmed, the name of Mr. Bliss being withdrawn at the request of the nominations. The following were confirmed: Postmaster at Augusta, Ga., Benjamin H. Hill; Collector of Customs for the Southern District of Georgia, Ad David S. Mr. Hoar moved to take up the bill to prevent the unauthorized cutting of timber on the public lands, and, after some further discussion, the motion was agreed to. Mr. Hoar then addressed the Senate in support of the bill. Mr. Vest followed in opposition to the bill. Mr. Hoar closed the debate, and the bill was passed. The Senate then went into executive session, and when the doors reopened adjourned.

Mr. MITCHELL offered a resolution in the Senate on the 21st, providing for the appointment of a special commission of five Senators to investigate and report not later than the second Monday in next December, as to the number of trade dollars issued by the United States before their legal tender was suspended; how said coins came into circulation subsequently; how many are still held in the several States of the country at what rates they were taken; how much profit accrued in any way to the Government from coinage of trade dollars, and what has been the practice of the mints, Governments and the receipt or refusal by them of the coins. How "Gath" Learned to Use the Weed.

As soon as the American boy is born he is given a few inches of tobacco plug, and has played transit twice or twice, he thinks it is necessary to smoke or chew. The first cigarette produces sickness, but is that of getting sick over tobacco. I can well remember when my mother sent me to get a certain pea jacket with a small tin can, such as was then up to our manufacturing quality, to bring some milk or cream home to flavor the coffee. An elder son of thunder had given me that afternoon a small piece of tobacco and taught me how to chew. He recommended that tobacco as entirely innocuous, and the proper thing to begin upon. As I was hanging with the milkman I nibbled at the tobacco. There was something in it indulgent and enticing, yet each time it whirled some. By the time I got home with the milk such movements were going on in my head that no pea jacket or tobacco and no bottle I have ever seen matched with them.

I got down on a log—for they were making a new well in the yard—and put my head over the grass and struggled to lose my stomach. I have often lost it since under similar circumstances, but railway travel probably have been made long ago by Lord Granville. Everything was conquered, and Tock was to be the leading candidate. The matter came to Cleveland's knowledge and he promptly put a veto to it, declaring that any one in any way responsible for it need never ask any favors from him. This attitude ended the plan, for those concerned in it were beaten cats "with hopes in the future."—Cor. Springfield Republican.

Mr. Blaine Complacent.

Latest advices from Mr. Blaine, late candidate of the late g. o. p. for the Presidency, are of the most encouraging nature. He might be described as fair, fat, and fifty-five. His complexion has freshened, the fish and oysters of the Chesapeake have fattened him, and he reached the five and fiftieth milestone of life a few days since. He is said to be actually robust and buoyant. He is gradually scalping his enemies, and blazing his way by easy stages to the nomination of 1888. It is stated that he considers himself almost "even" with Mr. Arthur and his Premier, Mr. Frelinghuysen. He thinks he defeated Mr. Arthur's Senatorial aspirations, and that Mr. Frelinghuysen and his family have so effectually "snubbed" that they will be glad to make a hasty retreat into Jersey early in March. Senator Edmunds a d ex-Senator Conkling are his next big game. Their discomfiture will not be so easily effected. A recent correspondent of the Chicago Times says that they give Blaine more trouble than either the President or any of his Cabinet. Mr. Blaine resides when he is no hope of dislodging him at Vermont Secretary from his seat. Mr. Edmunds is as firmly fixed in the Senatorial chair as the Green Mountains of his native State upon their base. But Mr. Blaine is not neglected by the frigid Vermonter, and is determined to make his seat as uncomfortable for him as possible. Edmunds is unpopular among his Senatorial colleagues, and not a few of them on the Republican side me more than willing to resign at any moment to get rid of the burden of the office, and stemming south and East was changed by squadrons of Indian lancers in the bush. THE STATE CAPITAL.

Michigan Honors the Old Soldier—The Game Law Bill Beaten—Feeble-Minded to be Cared For—Contract Labor—Minority Representation—First Appropriation—Our Office Less—Sundries.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

LANSING, March 21.

Representative Campbell, of Branch, on the 17th, offered the following preamble and concurrent resolution that was unanimously adopted, every one of the 91 members present voting yea, after eloquent speeches by Messrs. Black and Wright (both Democrats):

WHEREAS, We learn with sorrow that Ulysses S. Grant, our greatest soldier in days of peril, our honored President in the threshold-life of civil war, and our esteemed citizen in time of peace, is borne down by an enemy that the sword, now in its scabbard, cannot conquer; and,

WHEREAS, We recognize, and remember with grateful feelings, the personal qualities of bravery and courage of our great chief in as re-enacted by him through his patience in suffering and his fortitude in pain; and,

WHEREAS, Michigan in the pride of her unvarnished loyalty feels in the hour of trouble a brave defender of her cherished liberty; therefore,

Resolved, That the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, and in behalf of the people of the State of Michigan, we send to the hero of Appomattox, in his weary hours of suffering, the consolation of their sympathies and the benedictions of their confidence.

Resolved, That our earnest desires are that he may live many years of added blessings and usefulness to his life, and that all of health he may get afar off where he shall fall upon death.

The resolution was adopted in the Senate by a rising vote, and will be sent to the Senator (Curtiss of Kent) now in his feet. They are to be handsomely engrossed and fully framed and transmitted to the brave old hero.

GAME BILL BEATEN.

The bill to prevent the hunting of deer with dogs came up in the Senate on its third passage on the 17th, and called out a very long and very excited discussion for quite a part of the afternoon session. The bill slipped through the House so easily and unexpectedly some weeks ago, that it was never clearly known what it would pass the Senate too. Possibly it will at the present time be passed the first time, and would not if it failed the first time, and only received 16 yeas to 15 nays against it. It was re-considered and tabled to wait for a full Senate and

Notes and News.

The European war cloud grows darker.

Every soldier should vote for Allen B. Morse, the one armed veteran, for justice of the supreme court.

Vote to get your supreme court out of the hands of the corporation law yers and against T. M. Cooley.

Vote for a brilliant lawyer, a plucky soldier and one armed veterun for supreme justice, vote for A. B. Morse.

Thos. M. Cooley tries to win democratic votes by saying he voted for Tilden and Cleveland for president. He will find it a dangerous game.

It is the opinion of leading attorneys that the supreme court should be enlarged, so as to give more time for the consideration of cases and filing of opinions.

The fight in Michigan April 6, will be a fair and square fight between the people, on one hand and the corporations on the other—between Cooley and Morse. Be careful how you decide it.

Consistent republicans do not quite like the idea of voting for a man who claims to be a republican, and yet who voted for both Tilden and Cleveland for president. They prefer to vote for an honest man who is not ashamed to publicly advocate his political belief.

West Bay City has a democratic paper called the Times, the first number appearing March 21st. The paper is four pages, six columns to page. M. A. Dowling, of Muscelona, whose voice and pen were identified with Cleveland and Fallass in this district, is the editor.

The Grand Rapids Daily Democrat is now pasted and cut at the head, making it as convenient as all first-class city papers. Under the new administration the Democrat is making vast strides toward the front as a state and general home newspaper. See prices in another column.

The Detroit Post already concedes that Judge Cooley's chances of re election are from encouraging. Maj. A.B. Morse, besides being an able lawyer, is a popular man in all parts of the state and is developing strength in the unexpected quarters. He is known to be fearless and incorruptible and in all questions of interpretation of the law can be depended on to stand firm for the rights of the people.

The First Patent.

The first patent granted to an inventor in the United States is mentioned in a speech of Ex-Senator Wadleigh, of New Hampshire, in the Forty-fifth Congress. The Senator said "An intelligent gentleman of my own state has referred me to an act of the general court of Massachusetts Bay, passed in 1646, granting to one of his ancestors, Joseph Jenks, the exclusive right of making and selling his improved scythe for the term of fourteen years. That, I think, was the first patent granted to an inventor in America. The improvement referred to changed the short, thick, straight England scythe into the longer, thinner, curved implement with stiffened back now in use."

The Tutuhiets.

An Alaska letter to the San Francisco Chronicle says:

"Southern Alaska Indian looks like his Arizona cousin and has his ways, but in some respects he is notably an inferior article. Coming workmen brought in, fashioning curious and highly carved household utensils out of the woods and bone, making nets and baskets and other products of handicraft, but somehow these, showing good workmanship, lacked the finish and originality of their Arizona brethren, doing woods, carving bone and making other ornaments, not to speak of a language, character, record and altogether more advanced race. He's the landlord; ye're seen him yersilf, wid a cane.

An' he knocked on the door of the Widder O'Shane.

An' I whispered to Michael, "Now, what can it mane
That his worship is callin' on Widder O'Shane?

So I knew that it wasn't collectin' he'd be.

"It must be she owes him some money for rint,

For I've not once sat down by a fair woman's side
Since I sat down by her that I once called me bride.

"An' is it ye're poor now, Widder O'Shane?
Ye're a dacent woman, both in lay and clane;
An' sorry both are we here in the uppermost stip
When I think on unthin' wid Thomas Malone's?

Then the Widder O'Shane put the tea-kettle down,
An' she sez, "Misther Thomas, yer name is a

I take it most gladly" an' then me ould man
Med sez, "Bridget, cum in here, quick as ye

So then, Mary Murphy, I rin off that floor,
An' I ran into me attic and bolted the door;
An I sez to me Michael, "Now, but it manes
I'll have no one to pay, will that Widder
O'Shane."

RIVALRY ON ROLLER SKATES.

BY SARA D. ROSE.

The Albion rink was crowded with young people. It was the night of the annual masquerade, and when the music was over, the young ladies were to have a race for the championship of Albion. Every known shape and costume which could be formed from calico was there represented. Pirates in black and red, Indians in green, dusky as to color and face, while more audacious young fellow represented a barrel of sperits, his head protruding from one end of the barrel, with long cotton steamers depending from it, and his feet gracefully rolling along beneath. The best two young ladies skaters, one of whom was expected to win the race, were attired in pretty suits of pink calico, with long steamers of pink cotton floating behind them.

They nimbly skated together, unless it was when Alf Whitman, the brother of the taller of the two, joined them, and, leaving his sister Estelle to skate by herself, acted the part of a devoted cavalier to pretty Orette Harrington.

As soon as supper was announced the masks were lifted, and when it was over the young men stood ready to witness the race between the young ladies. None of the girls expected to distance Orette or Estelle, but several of them laughingly started out to keep them company.

Orette did not care to skate her best, for she knew that Estelle had set her heart upon the championship, and she cared too little about it herself to wish to offend her friend, who was of a very jealous disposition.

She had not thought of other opposition; but as they turned the first corner, Estelle a little in advance, Orette was astonished to see a tall, slender young lady in a black satin dress, trimmed with oldgold satin, a black velvet cap upon her curly head, from which depended a long, silky goldcolored plume, and with white kid gloves upon her hands, which reached nearly to her elbows, shoot ahead of her friend and proceed to execute a number of intricate maneuvers in front of Estelle, and, in spite of this extra turning and twisting, the stranger always managed to keep in front.

Orette knew that this would be very displeasing to Estelle, and by a little effort she gained her side, only to see that prancing stranger waiting like a spirited fairy before them. She glanced at Estelle and saw that her eyes were snapping with anger, and her cheeks were flaming with rage.

Suddenly the waiter crept on another spurt, and in a moment she was half way around the rink ahead of the two fragments, and was apparently intending to pass them again shortly.

Orette and Estelle were now the only Albion girls upon the floor, the others having withdrawn to witness the excitement.

Estelle Whitman was a good skater and was very sure upon her feet. She was very wary at the antics of the stranger, and noticing a group of empty chairs by the side of the rink, she darted to the side of the hall, and as if to be out of the crowded, ever one of the ladies' seats sprawling directly in the way of the girl in velvet.

Every one expected to see the stranger tumble, or perhaps trip over the overturned chairs. Not so a flash of unmasked power over her face, she increased her speed, and with the utmost ease she jumped over the chairs, and in a second more came up to the judges' stand in front of the audience.

After the excitement was over the judges were relieved that no accident to the fair contestants had occurred, and the stranger was lifted from the floor and carried from the village of Camden, near by, and Estelle added, with upturned nose: "She don't pay the least attention to any of the girls, but is all taken up with those half dozen Camden fellows, who, I do believe, brought her here."

Orette laughed a little and took off her skates, as the rest of the evening was to be devoted to dancing. She had promised the first dance to Alf Whitman, but when the set formed what was her astonishment to see him at the head of the dance with Miss Flora Archer.

"There," whispered Estelle, when it was finished, "see her lounging in the corners with the young men; and she jumps like a jumping-jack when she balances. Did you notice her, Orette?"

"Hush!" warned Orette; "somebody will hear you!"

"Well, I declare! I think I would stand up for her, Orette Harrington, when she is trying her best to get Alf away from you!"

Orette blushed at this coarse speech, and was about to move away, when Mr. Whitman and Miss Archer confronted them.

"Ah, girls!" said he, "I wondered where you were hiding your diminished heads. I wanted to present you to the belle of the evening."

Miss Archer cast a languishing glance at Alf, and appeared greatly pleased at this broad compliment; but Estelle frowned, and said in a cutting tone:

"I do not w..h any introduction to Miss Archer, Mr. Whitman, and I think you might be a little more careful yourself about your acquaintances."

"Ahal ny dear sister. So you are jealous are you? Do not mind them, Miss Archer; they are beneath your notice."

"I did not say I did not wish an introduction to Miss Archer," said Orette, quietly, although she was feeling much embarrassed.

"Thank you," said Miss Archer, bowing and leaving Mr. Whitman's arm, "Suppose we take some seats at the other side of the room."

Miss Archer assumed so much of the bearing of a cavalier that Orette, without thinking, passed to the other lady, took her arm, and left the brother and sister together.

Miss Archer drew some chairs into a cozy little corner, and the two sat down. They chatted a few moments, and then Miss Archer said:

"It is very impudent question that I am about to ask you; but I would like very much to know if yourself and Mr. Whitman are engaged?"

"No," said Orette, smiling. "We are not engaged and never shall be."

"Ah!" hazarded Miss Archer, shaking her head; "that is because you are angry at present."

"I am not angry," replied Orette. "He could not anger me by admiring another lady."

"But if you loved him?" persisted the strange girl.

"I never loved him," said Orette, laughing. "You may have him if you want him."

"You have made me very happy," replied the other, a smile in the dark eyes, then she picked up Orette's white hand and kissed it, while Orette looked in her surprise. Miss Archer deepened it by asking:

"Will you dance the next set with me?"

"I am engaged for this set," replied Orette, adding: "Ladies do not dance together in public."

"Oh, I beg your pardon, I forgot," and Miss Archer drew on a very sober face.

At this moment Orette's partner claimed her. It was one of the young men from Camden.

"You are forgetting yourself," he said in a warning tone to Miss Archer, as Orette arose to take her place among the dancers.

The party was over before Orette and Estelle drifted together again. Estelle was still angry.

"What a dreadful evening this has been," she said, peevishly. "I have lost the championship, and you, I fear, are surely going to lose Alf. He is hanging around for every minute."

"Never mind," laughed Orette, "I do not care in the least."

"Oh! It's well enough to say so, of course; for my part I'm glad the event is over."

Heads and cloaks were now being donned rapidly, and the two girls put on their wraps, and went out into the snowy room. Estelle made a discovery.

"Alf," said she to her brother, in an excited whisper, "that Miss Archer is in the gentlemen's dressing-room. I heard her talking and laughing in there in a loud and saucy way. I believe she is going away with those Camden fellows."

"Don't alarm yourself," returned her brother, angrily. "Miss Archer gave me permission to see her home myself."

"And Orette and I can take care of ourselves, I suppose," was her dismayed answer; but, as she looked around for her friend, she saw her just leaving that moment with a gay party of young people.

Estelle waited, with several others who were in Alf's confidence, to see him depart with the "belle of the ball," but they were disappointed. Miss Archer had disappeared, and could not be found anywhere.

"Served you right," was Estelle's comment.

The others said nothing then, but Alf in the next few days was not allowed to forget Miss Archer.

The days passed by and the skating in Albion rink was going on merrily one evening, when there was the stir of an arrival at the door and the same party from Camden who had "raced" in their costumes entered, accompanied by a number of others. This time the noble skating band came from the village of Camden, white satin with gold trimmings. The white and gold cap contrasted well with the dark curly hair, black eyes and red cheek of the skater, the indescribable coat of white satin, gold lace and gold buttons fitted the lithe form to perfection, but instead of a skirt were now worn knee breeches of white satin and gold lace, and gold embroidered white silk stockings, white kid shoes and gloves finished the costume.

The wearer of this costume soon began a series of maneuvers even more intricate those exhibited upon the previous evening.

"Miss Archer!" exclaimed Mr. Whitman in delight, and joining the fair skater he attempted to renew his acquaintance.

He did not enjoy her company long, however. Miss Archer soon joined Orette Harrington.

Orette did not quite approve the young lady's costume, but she said politely:

"Good evening, Miss Archer."

The skater laughed aloud, and then asked lumbly:

"Am I then so feminine looking that I am deemed forever to be Miss Archer?"

Orette only looked her surprise.

"Do you recognize me now?" asked the fair skater, as she threw off her cap, and the curls fell over her face.

Orette only looked her surprise.

"Do you recognize me now?" asked the fair skater, as she threw off her cap, and the curls fell over her face.

Orette only looked her surprise.

"Then Miss Harrington, will you keep a secret for me? I am not a lady. My name is Fred Archer. My home is in Washington. Rescuing quite an expert upon roller skates, I adopted these disgy costumes to make more of a sensation, and if you do not reveal my secret, I am anticipating quite a flirtation with our mutual friend and lover, Mr. Alf Whitman."

Orette colored a little, but she smiled also, and promised to keep Mr. Archer's secret for him.

From that moment his time was divided impartially between Miss Harrington and Mr. Whitman.

Alf became very bowsickle, and declared his affection to be excessive. He also dared to some of the fellows that he had "cut out" Ben Landis from Camden.

This was too much for Mr. Landis. He nearly exploded with laughter, and in his merriment the whole joke came out.

Alf was nearly paralyzed, but he managed to get away from the rink someway, the shouts of laughter singing him like the cat of a whip.

He was refused decidedly.

He then appealed and exclaimed: "That Archer is nothing but a poor

CURIOUS FACTS.

A SQUIRREL can run down a tree head first. The cat and the squirrel get down tail first off left to themselves.

The standing armies of Europe aggregate 3,500,000 able-bodied men. The taxes for their support aggregate $400,000,000.

While boring an artesian well on the Desert grant, near Los Angeles, the workmen discovered a deposit of conch shells at a depth of 100 feet.

A new motor, described as the explosion of successive cartridges of guncotton, has been produced in England, and is said to be applicable wherever small powers are required.

A PHILADELPHIAN went to a physician with what he feared was a hopeless case of heart disease. After examining the patient out that the creaking sound which he had heard at every deep breath was caused by a little pulley in the left auricular valve.

Of 1,632,748 persons returned by the census of Germany in 1882 as engaged in agri ultural work, 1,230,000, or nearly a million and a quarter, were females. The land of Bismarck still adheres to the old fashion of harnessing women to the cart and the plow.

In 1820 two hills of an area of about ten acres, of almost no agricultural value, were planted with fir and larch in Scotland, were planted with fir and other trees, and after successive thinnings, the sale of which yielded large sums, the remainder of the wood was sold off for £10,000. The sum realized for the wood on this waste land during the fifty years is stated to be equal per acre to the return from the best arable land in the country.

It is not a pleasant fact to know, but yet it is a fact, according to Prof. R. A. Proctor, that the earth is to-day as likely to quake and overthrow cities and towns as it has been at any time since man existed. The conditions which are at present most likely to cause the disturbances are changing, but so slowly that there is practically no difference between what they were at those Hazen years ago and what they will be thousands of years hence. Nobody would have cause of surprise, therefore, if the earth quake of Lisbon, in 1755, should presently be repeated. Indeed, it seems probable that great disturbances have recently taken place, not on dry land, but on land that is under the ocean, and that the log wave of those Hazen years ago and that

What the Beer Business Is.

The brewers and distillers and their lieutenants, the saloonkeepers, stand in opposition to every class that makes any pretension to goodness or even decency. Their business is opposed to everything in the way of good morals or good order.

It is the one business that has demoralization as its basis, which lives and thrives only upon vice. It kills out of a man every good impulse before that man is valuable to it, and the customer becomes valuable exactly in proportion as he becomes bad.

It is a business which is opposed by every true clergyman in the country.

It is a business which the merchant and business man hates and detests.

It is a business which is the standing dread of every mother.

It is a business which is the constant fear of every father.

It is a business which is the horror of every wife.

It is a business which makes ninety per cent of the business of the criminal courts.

It is a business which makes ninety per cent of the pauperism, for which the tax-payer has to pay.

It is a business which puts out the fire on the hearth and condemns wives and children to hunger, cold and rags.

It is the business which fosters vice for profit and educates wickedness for gain.

Drunkenness comprises all other vices. It is the dictionary of vice, for it includes every vice. Drunkenness means peculation, theft, robbery, arson, forgery, murder—for it leads to all these crimes.

It is a business which is at the bottom of all the political corruption of the country, the tool that has always been used by unscrupulous politicians from Boss Tweed to the very last bar gainer in politics.

It is the business that is used for everything that is bad and demoralizing, and which has never been associated in any way with any good object or cause.

It is the business which is the drag upon progress, the enemy of civilization, and the bar to improvement.

It is the business that is the right hand of the gambler, the pugilist, the prostitute, the thief and the vagrant.

It is the business that originated that peripatetic nuisance, the tramp, and is the father and mother of everything in the way of vagrancy and small crime.

It is the business that is answerable for a vast majority of the peculations and embezzlements and frauds by men in positions of trust.

It is the business that sweeps down every year thousands of young men, transforming them from the decent to the disreputable.

It is the one business in favor of which the only thing that can be said is that inasmuch as a man owns himself he has the right to commit suicide, moral, mental and physical.

It is a business based upon the lowest instincts of human nature, and the only one of which no one has ever spoken except apologetically.

It is a business which no one dares assert does no harm, the only dispute about which is as to the amount of harm it accomplishes.

And this business, this Pandora's box, insists the law shall not touch it. This aggregation of crime insists that it shall go on unchecked, unrestrained and unregulated. And more than that, it assumes to make the laws and insolently asserts to control the lawmaking power.

Based upon vast capital and with an army of votes by the agency of appetite, it has taken possession of states, as it long has of cities.

It is undermining our institutions and destroying the country. There is but one way of meeting it. There is no use in temporizing or compromising with it. The issue is made up. We have either to submit to its dictation or kill it. If the people are wise they will kill it. No matter what it costs, the rum power must be destroyed. It has grown to too great proportions now, and it is time that it be killed. Pulverize the rum power.—[Toledo Blade.

The Chicago Weekly News

AND THE

Charlevoix Journal

ONE YEAR

For $2.00

THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is now an eight-page, sixty-four-column paper. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. Its eight broad, long pages present each week a mass of choice, selected matter, containing much to suit each of the varying tastes of the family circle. First and foremost it gives you THE NEWS, complete as to details, but concise in form. Its connection with the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS (a member of the Associated Press) gives it facilities for news gathering unsurpassed by any journal in the country. Its MARKET REPORTS are specially complete and thoroughly trustworthy. Particular attention is given to agriculture and home matters. Every issue contains SIX COMPLETED STORIES, and a regular installment of an original story by some well-known English or American author, exclusively secured for the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. It condenses notes on fashions, art, industry, literature, science, etc., etc., specially and regularly.

Few papers in the country are so extensively quoted by the press in general for its bright and humorous paragraphs as the Chicago Daily News. These are all reproduced in the WEEKLY NEWS. In its editorial expression the paper speaks from the standpoint of the INDEPENDENT journalist, thereby avoiding the temptation to support or condemn the questionable under the pressure of party allegiance. Mere partisan extremists will not like it; the fair-minded and thoughtful of all parties will appreciate and value its candid statements of facts and conclusions, calculated to qualify the reader for the formation of his own intelligent opinions. The political events of the year to come promise to assume such a character that a thoroughly truthful and impartial record becomes all-important, rather than a partisan one, colored or perverted to individual liking.

In all its departments the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS aims to present the enterprising, impartial and entertaining family newspaper of the very highest grade.

WHAT OLD SUBSCRIBERS SAY

When they Renew their Subscriptions.

William Cannons, Pontiac, Oakland County, Mich., says: "I think it is the best paper in America."

A. S. Welch, Sullivan, O., says: "It is better than many of $2 papers."

Mrs. Walter Allen, 27 Charles street, Providence, R. I., says: "In connection year by year with others I receive, I must say NEWS, that your WEEKLY NEWS is gem, being what I would consider quite a moral (then a number of) news. It is the newspaper of the day. Hoping to continue."

Mrs. Dr. Foster, Woodhull, Henry County, Ill., says: "It is one of the newest papers I have taken."

S. W. Rhodes, Adrian, Mich., says: "I don't want to miss a number. It is the best paper I have ever taken."

Peter Lansing, Lorain, Saunders County, Neb., says: "I like THE WEEKLY NEWS. It is reliable and valuable news, and although I am in receipt of nine weekly journals, I am not satisfied to do without THE WEEKLY NEWS. It is news and not politics that I want, and it is impossible for me to get it entirely pure and unbiased except in the columns of all points of the compass."

M. E. Davenport, Palmyra, N. Y., says: "It is the cheapest, best paper I have ever taken."

Wm. L. Schoon, Hannibal, Mo., says: "I like your paper very much. I get six other papers, but do not like them as well as the WEEKLY NEWS."

Hon. B. Law, Mansfield, Tex., says: "I like your paper very much. I get six other papers, but I prefer yours to all of them. It is well stocked with general news, and although I am in receipt of nine weekly journals, I am not satisfied to do without THE WEEKLY NEWS. It is news and not politics that I want, and it is impossible for me to get it entirely pure and unbiased except in the columns of all points of the compass."

Its size and character considered, the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is the cheapest weekly in America. ONE DOLLAR A YEAR, postage included. Special Clubbing Terms bring it within the reach of all our subscribers. Sample copies may be seen at this office.

The Educated Miss.

She's a dainty little maiden,
With artistic graces laden,
Quite aware of her attractions and rejoicing
in her teens;
She pouches with contentation
All her Wassar education,
With a reminiscent flavoring of culture and of Lewis.

With suggestions by the lection,
She can scale the airy region
Where the transcendental latitude in gay disorder floats;
With a language rare and queenly
She can voyage most serenely
Through the hazy sublimation of the misty and remote.

She can read the rocky pages
Of the geologic ages
When the mighty megatherium was sleeping in his lair;
With lectures bright and smiling
She is often most beguiling
With medieval narratives of knight and "ladye fair."

She is often entertaining
When most hopelessly explaining
How the philosophic system in a measure
disagrees;
She is posted in quadratics
And the bi bar mathematics,
And can see you for the butter in the language of Paree.

She's an educated daisy,
And a most attractive crazy
With a stock of information too enormous to recount;
She brought away from college
Such immeasurable knowledge
Of the correlated members of the whizzing universe.

Still, I hope this gentle maiden,
With such erudition laden
And so eminently fitted with philosophers to cope,
Yet may manage to discover
Something worthy in a lover
All indent upon the making of a merchantable soap.

THE CATACAZY AFFAIR.

How the Russian Diplomat Became a Newspaper Correspondent.

Speaking of things historical reminds me of the Catacazy affair, writes a correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune. The other day an old friend of mine who once held office in Washington, but is now living a quiet, easy life in this city, ran across a paragraph taken from Ben: Perley Poore's "reminiscences," in which the veteran journalist refers to the social scandals which that Russian minister created by introducing, too often, his mistress into public parlors. "Newspaper correspondents to whom Mr. Catacazy had given considerable information"—I am quoting from the reminiscences—"appeared as witnesses against him, and, finally, formal complaint was sent to the emperor. He directed his foreign office to ask in his name that President Grant would tolerate Catacazy until the visit of his son, the Grand Duke Alexis, was concluded. To this personal appeal the president assented, but added as a condition that the offensive minister should have access to the white house only when accompanied by the grand duke, and then to hold no conversation whatever." I happen to be in possession of what I think is a hitherto unpublished story that throws confidential information furnished to at least one newspaper correspondent to which Ben: Perley Poore alludes. On Catacazy's arrival in Washington, he was treated with that consideration due to one occupying so exalted a position. Primarily his chief business was to defeat the Washington treaty. He was instructed to prevent the consummation of a treaty between the United States and England, no matter at what cost, but, relying almost solely on Senator Sumner's assistance, when that distinguished statesman fell, so fell all of Russia's hopes of success. Pending the negotiations, the Russian minister, wishing to create ill-feeling against England, sent for the Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, and dictated to him a scurrilous article, reflecting seriously on the government. At the minister's urgent request, this article was, however, shown him before it was wired west, and Catacazy made with a pen several alterations and interlineations in his own handwriting. The corrected article was then telegraphed to Cincinnati, and, of course, the attention of Secretary Fish was called to it as soon as the paper reached Washington. That honorable gentleman read it carefully, guessed the source of inspiration, and sent for Gen. Baynton, who promised to get for the secretary of state the original manuscript. This he did, and when Mr. Fish had recognized Catacazy's handwriting, he carefully placed the following in a private drawer for future use. A day or two later the Russian minister had some business of no particular importance with the secretary of state, but which transacted, the latter said:

"Your excellency will permit me to give you a little advice. Don't go to writing anything to the newspapers while you are in this country."

"Why, Mr. Secretary, what can you possibly mean by such a remark as that?" inquired Catacazy.

"Nothing, except what I tell you. Stick to your diplomatic duties while in America, and leave it to the regular correspondents to criticise the doings of the government to which you are accredited."

"Surely, Mr. Secretary, you do not think for one moment that I would do anything of the kind?"

"I am afraid you have already done so," said Mr. Fish. The Russian minister arose from his seat, and, assuming an attitude of great dignity, exclaimed with impressiveness: "In the name of my imperial master, and in the presence of my Maker, I solemnly declare that never in my life have I written or inspired any article to any newspaper in this country."

Mr. Fish tried in vain to prevent Catacazy from saying these words. "Stop! Stop!" he cried. "You know not what you are saying." But the Russian minister persisted in his denial, whereupon Mr. Fish opened his private drawer and handed a package of the Boynton manuscript to the man with this remark: "Can it be possible, Mr. Catacazy, that I have made a mistake?" The Russian gave a quick glance at the folio, turned red, stammered out some words of excuse, and hastened from the room. It was this outrageous falsehood as much as his disgraceful attacks on President Grant that gave Secretary Fish reason to despise the Russian, and when the latter so badly insulted American society by parading his mistress before the world, the cabinet could no longer refrain from demanding his recall by the government of St. Petersburg.

Mines of Alabama.

The iron fields of Alabama are indeed its greatest promise, and will be the source of its greatest wealth. They have been utilized only in the past ten years, but during that time great progress has been made. These fields are happily situated. They lie in the northern and central portions of the State, and are traversed by a number of important railroads which carry their product to market, and they are in close proximity to the coal fields of the State, which greatly cheapens the cost of manufacturing the iron. The principal iron ores in the State are the brown and red hematite. The main deposits a swelling the line of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad, from Brierfield northward to the State line, and southward to Birmingham; along the Alabama and Great Southern Railroad from Birmingham northeast; along the Coosa River from Greensport north, and finally in what is known as the Red Mountain deposit, extending from a point a few miles east of Tuskeloosa to the northeastern corner of the State, a hundred miles long by half a mile in width. At the point at which it is intersected by the North and South Alabama Railroad this vein is thirty feet thick, and there are places where it is 150 feet deep. The amount of iron in the Red Mountain district is estimated at 500,000,000,000 tons, and in the Cahaba hills and valleys at 200,000,000,000 tons, making the iron supply of Alabama practically inexhaustible for all time to come. The ore is the very best anywhere in the country, yielding fully 50 per cent of metallic iron. In 1880 the pig iron product of the State was only 62,350 tons. In 1881 it had increased to 225,000, in 1882 to 500,000 tons, and last year to 560,000 tons, worth $7,000,000. an improvement of over 1,000 per cent in five years. The total iron production was 191,000 tons in 1880, 350,000 in 1881, 450,000 in 1882, 580,000 in 1883, and 650,000 in 1884, making Alabama rank as the fifth State in the production of iron. In close proximity with these iron mines lie the various coal fields of Alabama. The fields south of the Tennessee River cover 5,530 square miles; the Cahaba 200 square miles, and the Coosa, northwest of the Coosa River, 150 square miles. The Cahaba field is about twelve feet thick, the Black Warrior field in some places 150 feet thick. In this field iron ore is frequently found in numerous positions among the coal-bearing rocks. The Pratt seam is most convenient to Birmingham and to the present lines of transportation, and is largely used for smelting and miscellaneous purposes. The entire output of coal at the Alabama mines is 5,000,000 tons, or 1,500,000 for the year but the prospective increase is at least as great as this, as the demand for this coal increases in the South. A large number of the Southern Railroads are now utilizing it, and New Orleans, Atlanta, and Mobile in particular are making an earnest demand for Alabama coal. In 1872 the total coal product of the State was only 10,000 tons; in 1880, when its census was taken, it was 330,000 tons; in 1882, 1,600,000 tons, an increase of 15,000 per cent in twelve years.

The fire-flood in 1881 destroyed $125,000,000 worth of property in this country. This, notwithstanding the immense expenditures of municipal governments for fire-extinguishers of various kinds. And yet the fire department of our cities are generally as efficient as brave and intelligent employees can possibly make them. The modern fire-engine is a grand triumph of mechanical skill. Nevertheless, at less than two years' years of the fire-demon would result in as great loss to the country as the five years of the Civil War, so far as the national debt represented the loss by that war. How to reduce this annual loss is, therefore, a very knotty problem for city governments to solve. Insurance will probably be found some day, experience indicating that it will be the measure of prevention. It is to the honor-builder that we must look, rather than to the inventors of extinguishers.—The Current.

Odd, that the best three billiard players in the House of Representatives should be three Colonels, representing the three great sections of the country—Kane of Pennsylvania, Dobbins, of Texas, and Burns, of Missouri.

The sum of $100,000,000 has been reserved for the redemption of greenbacks, and small change to the amount of $31,500,000 is stated by itself. In the new form of debt statement the Pacific Railroad bonds are added to the bonded indebtedness. Within three months the Treasury has lost $16,920,000 in gold and gained $7,000,000 in silver. Commissioner of Pensions Black has issued the following circular:

The Pension Agents—Investigations now in progress show that in many instances very gross frauds have been perpetrated upon the Government through the connivance and collusion of employees in pension agencies. You must exercise the greatest care in regard to the selection of your subordinates. The temptation, it is true, may be reimbursed from your bond for such losses as are above reproach, but this does not palliate the offense or the scandal to the service. This message of earnest caution is sent you to call your attention particularly to your own risk and duty in the premises. Investigate your agencies thoroughly. Take all possible precaution to cleanse the service of every suspicion or unworthy character.

POLITICAL.

There was a lively scene at one of the recent executive sessions of the United States senate. Senator Evarts took occasion to denounce the political associates of his brother senators, Riddleberger and Mahone, as swindlers and repudiators. The next day Riddleberger replied with a furious attack upon Mr. Evarts, the bitterness of which has hardly been exceeded in the annals of Congress. The language was of the "rightling" kind, but Mr. Evarts neither opened his lips nor appeared to hear it.

Certain New York Democrats are said to be disgusted at President Cleveland's reappointment of Postmaster Pearson. According to the Chicago Times Washington correspondent, "they say that if the President thought it necessary to especially emphasize his administration of municipal civil service reform he could have done so very effectually by selecting for Pearson's successor a Democrat of high character, who would have carried out the theory that a great postoffice such as that at New York should be conducted upon purely business principles and without regard to party-an considerations. To go outside of the Democratic party to find such a man is for the President to confess that he could not find a Democrat who came up to the standard, or that he could not find one whom he was willing to trust to carry out his policy. They say that the effect of Pearson's nomination and confirmation would almost inevitably be a heavy loss to the Democratic party in New York, and that the injury can not be fully repaired even by filling all of the important Federal offices in that city with active Democratic partisans."

Secretary Manning has appointed Eugene Higgins, of Baltimore, Chief of the Appointment Division of the United States Treasury.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secretary Raymond received a dispatch from the United States Consul General at Panama, on the 31st ult., informing him that Gen. Preston, the rebel leader, had seized the Pacific steamship Colon and imprisoned the captain and purser, the agent of the company, Consul Wright, and other Americans. Secretary Whitney has telegraphed to Admiral Jouett, who is now at New Orleans, to proceed to Key West with the Tennessee and Swatara and there await further instructions. The commander of the Alliance, now at Key West, has been ordered to Aspinwall. The Secretary also telegraphed to Commander Kane of the Galena, at Aspinwall, directing him to afford all possible protection to American citizens. Her Majesty's steamer Lily, on entering the wharf at Colon, was fired upon and returned the compliment.

Advices from Battleford, Northwest Territory, to April 1, confirm the report that the Indians have backed the town. They were preparing to attack the barracks where the inhabitants were intrenched. Sir John Macdonald said in the Canadian Parliament that he had received two dispatches from the Northwest—one intimating that the Indian revolt at Battleford was likely to meet with a satisfactory solution, and the other that Crowfoot, Chief of the Blackfeet, had promised to be loyal. Crowfoot is the most powerful Chief in the Northwest, but his word is not to be depended upon. Riel is said to have 1,000 men with him. Troops are being sent to the front as fast as possible from every direction.

Dispatches from Battleford, in the Northwest Territory, on the 3d of April, report that the Stony Creek Indians have retreated to Poundmaker's reserve, about eighteen miles distant, but contemplate an immediate return. The savages are massacring the white settlers. Advices from Winnipeg say that the barracks at Battleford, where the inhabitants are intrenched, are closely besieged.

At a conference held in Washington he ween the Secretaries of State and the Navy and the Attorney General, it was decided that the United States has by treaty guaranteed unmolested transit across the Isthmus of Panama. The available marines on the Brooklyn Navy Yard and some Gatling guns will probably be shipped soon by a Pacific Mail steamer.

The following dispatch from Constantinople, dated the United States war steamer Galena, has been received by the Secretary of the Navy: "Aspinwall is in ashes. It was burned by the insurgents to escape capture by the Government troops. The Pacific Mail docks, the railroad property on the north end of the island, and the canal property at Colegal are safe. Everything else burned. The ash pping is safe. I have all my force on shore protecting property. My ship is crowded with refugees. Thousands are destitute and without shelter."

At the opening of the French Chamber of Deputies on the 30th ult., peace was preserved in the streets by a large force of military. Order reigned in the galleries. Deputies Ministers by hurling denunciations. Premier Ferry was loudly hissed. He presented a demand for an extra credit of 200,000,000 for military operations in China, which was promptly voted down, by 398 to 101. The resignation of the Ministry was immediately announced. The Paris Socialist journals print an article demanding the head of Premier Ferry for his blunders in Tonquin.

Osman Digma is said to have withdrawn his whole force to Temanieb, where he proposes to give battle to Gen. Graham. El Mahdi has sent large reenforcements to Osman.

It is said that a French advance upon Pekin is for the present impossible. Its Premier will not be able to send more than 50,000 men to Tonquin, and there will be considerable delay owing to lack of transports. The Chamber of Deputies on the 31st ult. voted the first installment of $30,000,000 of the Tonquin credit of $40,000,000 asked for by Prime Minister Ferry. The Government received a dispatch from Gen. de Lisle announcing the War Office to send him reenforcements immediately. A revolt against the French is reported from Cochin China.

Russia's answer to England on the Afghan question is said to accept the proposals of Earl Granville, recognizing as debatable territory the zone laid out as such by England.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

At about 5 o'clock on the morning of Thursday, April 2, the relatives of Gen. Grant were summoned to his bedside, his discomfiture being momentarily expected. The patient rallied after the hypodermic injection of brandy had been given, and fell into a troubled sleep. At 9:30 he desired to go down-stairs, but was restrained, and until noon slept in his arm-chair, awakening with his pulse stronger and his condition more comfortable. The improvement continued during the afternoon, and an examination of his throat disclosed the fact that the ulcerations had lost their angry appearance. He became restless at times, walking up and down the floor, but became more calm about 8:30 o'clock, when he took the record of his own pulse and temperature, and he suffered no pain, and desired that his family engage in conversation with him. During the day no one but Mr. Cyrus W. Field, Stephen B. Elkins, the members of the family, and Dr. Newman was allowed to see the General. When Mr. Field went away he was very enthusiastic over Gen. Grant's pluck. "It is marvelous," he said. "His force of will and his courage are astonishing. Just think of his walking across the room instead of being carried like a sick person." Gen. Grant was feeling better than he had for days. The family came to his room while Mr. Field was there. Gen. Grant determined to take his own temperature and count his pulse. He set a stop-watch and placed it on his lap, and then put the thermometer in his mouth. Then he took his left wrist in his right hand and began counting the beats. The stop-watch stopped on his knee and was gliding toward the floor. The General noticed it. His hands were engaged, and the thermometer in his mouth prevented him asking assistance. The watch was just falling when Dr. Shrady caught it. The General seemed anxious to talk a good deal. The doctors and family discouraged it. The General rested well during the night.

President Cleveland informed the Utah Commission that his administration would lend all the aid possible to purge Utah of the practice of polygamy.

The United States Senate adjourned sine die on Thursday, April 2. The Senate cleared its desk of nearly all the nominations that had been pending since the extra session, and accepted upon were the following: W. W. Lang, of Texas, to be Consul at Hamburg; A. H. Grove, of Pennsylvania, for Consul at Athens; E. B. Howell, of Pennsylvania, for Consul at Manchester; W. E. Kernochan, for Naval officer at New Orleans; Thomas Quigley, for Appraiser at New York; James O. Henderson, for Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eleventh Indiana District; J. T. Magraw, for Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Tennessee District; Thomas Cowgill, of Livepo ol. The Republican Senators had decided to defeat the renomination of Ingraham if by whose ter-es have not ever shall who have not resigned, except in cases where cause for removal was assigned, which in their judgment was sufficient. Extraordinary efforts were made to have no fixed term, and may be removed at any time by consent of the Senate, but not without such consent. It is understood that it consists of the Postmaster at Liverpool and others whose successors were nominated, and not resigned. It is anticipated by Democrats on the floor that there will be a renewal next winter of the fight against the confirmation of some Administration appointees who have incurred odium. A message was received from the President announcing the nomination of Ex-Gov. Lawton for the Russian Mission. This withdrawn on the receipt of a telegram from Gov. Lawton declining the nomination. The Senator held that the Appointees' political qualifications had never been removed. The Democratic caucus decided that he had received a full pardon from President Johnson in 1865. Senator Edmunds insisted that this did not remove the political disabilities. He quoted section 3 of the Fourteenth amendment, the provisions which he held to apply to this case are: No person shall hold any office under the United States who, having previously taken an oath as an officer of the United States to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof; but Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each house, remove such disability. The Georgia Senators contended that the Civil Lawton had never taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States; and that the oath he took was a mere oath of allegiance. Both Houses have the undoubted right to defeat the confirmation, on the nomination was withdrawn. The President and Secretary of State will examine the question of law carefully before appointing Lawton to any office. The Secretary of State is understood to hold that the Fourteenth Amendment removed the disability. If the President agrees with him, Lawton will be appointed Minister to Russia. This now seems probable.

BE STRONG.

BY JUDGE JOHN W. EDDY.

When temptation strikes you
And would lure you into wrong,
Let your inborn voice forbid you,
"Quit yourselves like men, be strong!"

Plead not every sinful excuse
When a duty's near you stands;
Grapple with it bravely, crying:
"Quit yourselves like men, be strong!"

Be not hesitating cowards
Do the right and fight the wrong,
Dare not to be weak and falter;
God commands you to be strong.

In life's battlements, all around you
And all noises will be long
Into blows, as when been steadfast
And heroically strong.

Trust and love me; God, he will love you,
Will arise if you in Him rely;
And to victory will lead you,
If, in His strength, you be strong.

When faith rises over weeping,
And God's light shall make you shout,
Life will prove a treasured voyage,
And its end will be a song.

"FOUR DOLLARS A WEEK."

BY M. A. B.

"I wish I could do something to earn some money," sighed pretty Flossie Templeton, as she looked idly out of the window. "Here I am, 19 years old, six other children younger than I, and no one to work for us all but poor father. I really am ashamed of myself. But what can I do? I attended Woodley Seminary for more than two years, but, for all that, I don't know enough to teach school. I can't teach music, all I can play is a few polkas and waltzes. I can't even do fancy work for sale. The only thing I am good for is to do housework, and mamma would faint if I should ever so much as mention going away to work in somebody's kitchen."

Her mournful soliloquy was interrupted by her little sister, who came into the room bringing a letter.

"Is that for me, Nance?" asked Flossie, as the little girl, resigning her self to a fog of sisterly affection.

"Why, it's from my old classmate at Woodley Seminary," and hastily tearing it open, Flossie was soon lost in its contents.

The letter contained the information that her old school friend was now living in a town only five miles distant, and that she was going away that afternoon for a visit of a week or two.

But one part of the letter was more interesting to Flossie than any other. There was a young man boarding at the good girl whom her mother could get to do general housework. Hired help was scarce in the town, and here as her would be a chance to get a good girl four dollars a week.

Flossie read this part over two or three times and then natured itself in her busy mind.

"Why couldn't I go and work for them? I should earn four dollars a week? I have no friends in Fresport except Ida herself, and she went away Monday this fall to be with her. I can pretend to mamma that I am going to visit Ida Copeland for a month or two, and I will get the money. An assured home and work for them. The very thing."

A smile broke over her countenance, and showed the sweet little dimples in chin and cheek, and making her irresistibly charming.

She went into her room and put the letter away; then lifting the lid of her trunk, she took from a box a picture in a small case, and gazed at it long and very softly.

"I don't know what Norman Erlington would say if he knew of my working in a servant's kitchen; but really there is nothing else I can do. I am ashamed to stay at home and be a burden to my father. Of course I do most of the work, but then mamma and the little girls can do it well enough, and I am sure he will, it isn't likely I'll see Norman again, so it doesn't make much difference what he would think."

Norman Erlington, whose picture she had in her possession, was a young collegian who had spent the previous summer visiting relatives in the town. He had paid more attention to Flossie than to any of the other village belles, and, as he was handsome and stylish, it is no wonder the heart of our little maiden was touched. On going away, he had asked permission to write to her, but as she had never received any letters she came to the conclusion that he had forgotten her.

The morning Flossie told her mother that she wanted to go to Freeport to stay a month or two.

"I received a letter from Ida Copeland yesterday, and you know I have never been away to visit since I came home from school over a year ago.

"I wish we could go," said Mrs. Templeton, a fade woman who still seemed to be resting on a chair to be faded-looking. "But you have no clothes fit to go; your frock is very stylish."

"Yes, I did use to be," answered Flossie, carelessly.

"Well, it you think your clothes will do, I will be glad to have you go. Perhaps you will have an opportunity to see some good society there. I would like to see you a less dress, but your father's salary is small, and the still dress goods at so many shoes that——"

"O, never mind me, mamma; I'll do very well," interrupted saucy Flossie, running to unpack her trunk.

The next day, when the daughter packed up his her mother at the depot, she said

"Now, mamma, don't expect me to write to you, for I am away, for you know I'd just hate writing."

"Very well, my dear. Have as good a time as you can," and, with a long kiss, they parted.

"Poor young!" thought Flossie, as the train sped on its way. "Wouldn't she be horrified if she knew I am going to apply for a place in Mrs. Copeland's kitchen!"

In a few minutes the town of Freeport was reached, and the young girl stood looking around her in a rather bewildered way. The first thing she did was to ask a man standing near the way to Mrs. Copeland's residence. As the town was a small one, he was able to give her minute directions. Bowing her thanks, she started on a brisk walk for the designated place.

On reaching the house, which was a fine brick one, she was about to ascend the steps and ring the bell, but recollecting herself, went around to the side door. In answer to her timid knock a lady came to the door.

"Is Mrs. Copeland in," inquired Flossie.

"I am Mrs. Copeland," the lady an lingly replied, "Won't you come in?"

"I heard that you wanted a girl to do general housework, so I came to see if I could get the place," said Flossie, flushing deeply.

"How did you know I wanted to engage a girl?" asked Mrs. Copeland.

"I learned of it through your daughter's letter to Miss Templeton."

"O, then you are a girl Miss Templeton sent? Very well, it is all right. I suppose you can do all kinds of work?"

"Yes, ma'am; I think so."

"What is your name?"

"Rachel Bay."

After a few more questions, all of which Flossie answered satisfactorily, Mrs. Copeland engaged her for a month.

The room to which she was afterward shown was neat and clean, but rather poor in its appointments, and Flossie thought, with a regretful sigh, of her own pleasant room at home. "I almost wish I hadn't come," she sighed, as she descended the stairs.

Mrs. Copeland was so kind and pleasant in her instructions, and her new girl was so quick to understand, that they were mutually pleased. Work was no hardship for Flossie, for she had been accustomed to it from her earliest infancy; besides the family at this time was small, consisting only of Mr. and Mrs. Copeland.

Mrs. Copeland was rather reserved, so Flossie did not learn much about the family affairs, although she always listened eagerly whenever Ida's name was mentioned. From what was said, however, she could see that the mother loved her daughter as few daughters are loved.

One day when her mistress was away, Flossie, having finished her work, sprightly entered the parlor. Seating herself at the grand piano, she ran over the keys with her little tollmaiden hands. Presently the ma ing Marine City answering the set to protect ish and preserve fisheries, and the House the following bills passed: Establishing a Recorder's Court in Detroit; providing for Leslie and Mason pon; defining territory from Marquette and Menominee counties for the purpose of iron. A resolution that he cutter manufacturers was passed. The bill was referred to the Committee on State Affairs.

A concurrence resolution for adjournment of the two houses from Thursday, April 2, to Wednesday, April 8, was adopted by the Senate on the 26th ult. The adjournment is on account of the spring elections. A remonstrance of the board of supervisors of Marquette County against detaching any territory from that county to organize a new county for Iron was presented. The following bills passed: Incorporating a society for scientific industry; fixing the names of Michigan soldiers; for continuance of actions in Justices' courts in cases of vagrancy, but by reason of sickness, absence, or inability; amending section 741, Howell, in relation to returns by township clerks; for building the asylum for insane criminals as soons for the publication of newspaper articles and reports prepared by professors of the Agricultural College; providing for the sale of the Soldiers' Home tax; providing for the payment of certain claims. The Senate then went into committee of the whole.

The House bill amending the charter of the city of Muskegon and the Agricultural College appropriation bill were passed by the Senate on the 31st ult. The military clause, which the House struck out, was restored by the Senate. The clause passed the House bill amending the charter of the city of Lansing. The Senate concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment was amended so as to make the adjournment Wednesday, April 8. A concurrent resolution and Means was read a third time and passed. A concurrent resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of the Senate and House began an investigation of the Secretary of State's department under the new administration of Gen. Shakespeare. Gen. Beadle, Shakespeare, Palmer of Detroit, and M. Israel, a Kalamazoo clothier, have been subpœnaed, and the charges of extravagance in the conduct of the department will be investigated.

Bonds Issued by Bay City: incorporating Banner: for a Brewster's Feast in Kalamazoo; incorporating St. Ignace; and amending act 97 of 1881 relative to the payment of wages earned and materials furnished for public buildings and public works were passed by the Governor on the 31st ult. The Governor also signed his approval of the acts amending section 5980, C. Howell, relative to courts held by Justices of the Peace, and authorizing them proceedings in Saginaw, Midland county. Bills passed incorporating Frankfort, Benzie County, and incorporating Bessemer, Ironwood County.

Both houses held two sessions on the 28th ult., and did little talking and considerable work. The Senate passed bills to increase the Quartermaster general's office inquiry, postponing the November election to April 1, in the Senate the following bills passed: Reorganizing the Detroit Police Force; for the better and more active to the Vassar School district No. 1; amending section 2 of act 205 of 1881, relative to the poor; relative to uniformity system of accounts of county officers; amending the act to consolidate and provide for the government of the city of Detroit; relative to highways and posts in roads; authorizing the Auditor to pay the claims of the count antes; incorporating Bessemer; relative to the Ironwood; relative to the Ironwood; amending Section 5980, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5982, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5986, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5987, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5988, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5989, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section 5990, Howell, relative to justices' courts; amending Section

STUB ALLEN.

Ever since he could remember he had been called Stub, although that was not his true name. But it was appropriate, and for that reason it had clung to him.

He was scarcely taller than a well-grown boy of ten, while his shoulders were broad, and his face wrinkled like that of an old man. Strangers were curious in regard to him, and as he was employed at a railroad depot his story was often told.

It was all because of tobacco that he was so short. He began to smoke when he was only three years old, and continued the habit until he was nearly thirty. Then he determined to give up tobacco. It cost him a terrible effort to do this, yet he persevered, although his nerves were so shaken that for weeks he could not trust himself to take a cup of coffee in his hand.

His father, from whom he inherited the appetite, was an inveterate smoker, and when he begged to be allowed to smoke a pipe was given to him. After that he smoked at home occasionally, and when away the novelty of seeing such a child puffing at a pipe or cigar led thoughtless men and boys to tempt him to make an exhibition of his folly.

"Allow a boy of mine to smoke!" he exclaimed, when this question was asked him. "Never! I have suffered enough for a whole family. There is not a day of my life when I am not mortified at being such a stub. If my boys don't grow up in good shape, it shall not be because they use tobacco while they live with me. They say they an't ashamed of me, but I think I can trust them for not wanting to look like me. Why, I looked as old as I do now when I was twenty-five, and I smoked until I was nearly thirty."

"What made you stop?"

"Because I must stop or die. I had a touch of the horrors, delirium tremens, brought on by tobacco instead of liquor. Once was enough for me; and besides, the doctors told me my chance for life were about over. I quit then, but money wouldn't hire me to go through what I did the next six months. Sometimes now, when I smell a good cigar, I am half crazy for it, but nothing would tempt me to take a single smoke. If I did, it would be all up with me.

"I didn't marry until I was clear of all that, and my wife thinks as I do about our boys. They are taller now than I am, with a prospect of growing right along. They are good scholars, and I calculate to send them through college if they let smoking and drinking alone. When they begin with tobacco and liquors I have done spending money for them.

"I never cared for liquor, although I wonder I didn't; but I tell you the way to have good men is to be sure of the boys. I don't want any more stubs around where I am, and I don't mean to have them if I can prevent it."—Mary D. Chelks, in Temperance Banner.

The Chicago Weekly News

AND THE

Charlevoix Journal

ONE YEAR

For $2.00

THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is now an eight-page, sixty-four-column paper. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. Its eight broad, long pages present each week a mass of choice, selected matter, containing much more than each of the varying tastes of the family circle. First and foremost it gives all THE NEWS, complete as to details, but concise in form. Its connection with the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS insures the best of the Associated Press dispatches, and facilities for news gathering unsurpassed by any journal in the country. MARKET REPORTS are specially complete and thoroughly trustworthy. Particular attention is given to agriculture and home matters. Every issue contains SIX COMPLETED STORIES, and a regular installment of an original story by some well-known English or American author, exclusively secured for the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. Condensed notes on fashions, art, industry, literature, science, etc., etc., appear regularly.

Few papers in the country are so extensively quoted by the press in general for its bright and humorous paragraphs as the Chicago Daily News. These are all reproduced in the WEEKLY NEWS. In its editorial expression the paper speaks from the standpoint of an INDEPENDENT journalist, thereby escaping the temptation to support or condemn the questionable under the pressure of party allegiance. Mere partisan extremists will not like it; the fair-minded and thoughtful of all parties will appreciate and value its candid statements of facts and conclusions, calculated to qualify the reader for the formation of his own intelligent opinions. The political events of the year 1885 promise to assume such a character that a thoroughly truthful and impartial record becomes of supreme importance rather than a partisan one, colored or perverted to individual liking.

In all its departments the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS aims to present a live, enterprising, impartial and entertaining family newspaper of the very highest grade.

WALL STREET'S FUTURE.

The Coming Man of the Stock Market—Jay Gould's Help and the Young Vanderbilts.

They are saying down in Wall street that the old gang will not get back into power, but that in the forthcoming moves new operators will be developed. One of the coming men in New York financial circles is S. V. White, broker, lawyer and deacon in Mr. Beecher's Plymouth Church. He is a youngster yet, but he is a promising one, and moreover he has captured Jay Gould's heart. Any person who could carry to so successful an issue such a speculation as White engineered in his celebrated Lackawanna deal may be sure of Gould's appreciation and admiration if he seeks it. White was originally a lawyer, but progress up the legal ladder of fame was too slow, and when the young man saw in the flush times of 1881 that many of his broker friends were making $200 or $300 a day six days in the week, he put his money in a Stock Exchange seat, and bought and sold stocks for a living. He had already some few thousands of dollars and he had by his brightness attracted the attention of Beecher of Plymouth Church, whose old and influence were gladly given to him. It takes a nimble mind to get along in Wall street, but White was not behind the quickest. He soon had an office full of customers, and they began to put up jobs on the street, almost all of which it must be said in truth were successful. Gould caught sight of White's brilliant work, sent for him, and offered him business.

When Gould takes a liking to a man that man's fortune is made, provided he has brains enough to live up to his privileges. Frank Work and Charles Osborne, and Marshall Conner, Russell Sage and a host of others owe quite as much to Gould as to themselves for their Wall street success. White took the hint and he and Gould got along very nicely together. White was made the general of the Lackawanna deal. He made for himself $250,000 by twisting the shorts on the 1st of last March, and half as much more by selling the stock short on the reaction that followed. Then the same deal was repeated with the same result, but the pull was not with the last of the year 1884, and then the young operator cleaned up and found himself $2,000,000 better off through the fluctuations in Lackawanna alone than he had been a year before. In other stocks he had made $1,000,000 more. Gould, who had known of his plans and had been in the pool with him, also reaped substantial profits.

White is now one of the foremost men in the street. Five years ago he was comparatively unknown. He is worth between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, and is admirably equipped to take advantage of the many bargains that must come with the revival of good times. Not a banker or broker but courts his friendship and good will and is willing to lend him money or go into a deal with him. He is one of the few at the ebb of hard times, finds himself better off than at the beginning of them and who has abundant capital and credit with which to profit by the approaching prosperity. These are the men who are in the next ten years to develop into the richest men in America. It is up-hill work for the Seneys, the Villards, the Keenes, the Garrisons and the plucked Wall street men to even get back what they have lost, but the men who have weathered the gale and are still in possession of snug bank accounts - who have a million or more with which to build - they are the ones who will swell their possessions by the scores of millions ten or twelve years hence. White is one. Frank Work is another. Keene will be a third, and so they go. There are not more than half a score of them, all told, but they will be an important figure in the Nation's financial history if things go well with them.

There is diversity of opinion as to whether young George Gould will keep the Gould possessions together, or not. Thus far he has not fulfilled all the fond desires of his distinguished parent. He has not much of a head for finance, or a surplus of aptitude for speculation. To be a good speculator requires much sagacity. He enjoys the theaters very well, and likes to slip in behind the scenes among the pretty chorus or ballet girls, and his head aches quite frequently next day during business hours. Nevertheless Mr. Gould is making every effort to make a business man of him, and he ought to succeed. A good teacher may sometimes brighten up a dull student. Gould has two more boys in reserve, however, and when they are old enough they may be trotted out in place of their elder brother. The Vanderbilt boys are even less promising than the Gould stock, and no one doubts that the Vanderbilt fortune will be blown to the four winds of heaven ere a score more of years has tolled by.

Miss Gweplu's Cheap Princeling.

The portrait of Princess Beatrice of England, the youngest daughter of the Queen, represents her as a comely and substantial woman. She will be twenty-eight years old on the 14th of next April, and is thus much nearer an old maid's estate than Princesses usually come. The youth selected for her husband, Prince Henry of Battenberg, is a kind of a "poor relation" of the Emperor of Germany. The radical press of London calls him a Dutch pauper, but from that harsh remark it need not be supposed that he is ragged or particularly hungry. He is simply without a job, and, as Kings and Princes cannot rob folks nowadays without being arrested like any other man, he is without visible means of support. When Prince Henry, who is a handsome creature with decayed teeth and bad breath, has married Miss Guelph he will be in very comfortable circumstances. Parliament will give her $150,000 outright and an annuity of $50,000. If Henry cannot purchase all the sausage, beer, cheese, kraut and some wine that he wants with this allowance, it may be that his mother-in-law will help him out. Princess Beatrice has been in love many times. She first loved a tutor who belonged to the common herd. Then she was smitten with the Prince Imperial of France, also out of a job. Following this she doted some on her old reprobate of a brother-in-law, Prince Louis of Hesse, a widower. From him it was but a step to the despised Battenberg princeling. Royalty must be in a pretty hard row of stumps in England when the youngest, best looking, smartest and most amiable daughter of the Queen can find no husband but a half-baked little princeling remotely connected with the royal family of Germany. But this is the penance which Beatrice must pay for being the youngest. There are not first-class Princes enough to go around.—Chicago Herald.

Lancashire Lasses.

The lady superintendent of a hospital in one of our Lancashire towns where the distinctive characteristics of the people come out even more broadly than usual, told us that at first she hardly knew what to make of such a state of things, and was almost afraid to venture out of doors, for she could neither understand the speech of the people nor make herself understood by them. Being a gentlewoman in every sense of the word and possessed of much tact, with a strong reserve of common sense, she soon became a great favorite with the rough men and women by whom she was surrounded, but could never get over the sense of amusement at being now and then stopped in the streets by a knot of mill girls—all perfect strangers to her and she to them—and told that she had on a very pretty gown and they would like to know where it was made. "In London," she usually had to answer; and would further gratify their curiosity by telling them to take a good look at it, so that they might not forget the way in which it was made. To have felt, or on any rare occasion, unnecessary would have been the height of absurdity, as the girls really intended to be complimentary. There was a story told of two ladies—one an American—who, when walking along one day, heard the comments which were freely passed upon their appearance and attire; some bright buttons which the American lady had on her coat being an very form of attraction, and particularly taking the mill girls' fancy. Foolishly enough the lady turned round and sonnily rated them, with the very unpleasant consequence that she and her companion were followed and hooted at by an ever-increasing crowd of men, women, and children, so that they had at length to take refuge in the police station, which by good fortune chanced to be close at hand. In this case, too, no rudeness had been intended; the girls themselves would have felt pleased for any one to remark upon their clothes, and they could not imagine that for them to do so would be disagreeable to others.—Chamber's Journal.

Soup for Dinner.

No doubt, in many families, the prejudice against soup has arisen from the fact that it is usually prepared and served in large quantities, instead of, as at the tables of the rich, in small portions, though many kinds would furnish in themselves a substantial meal for a growing child. At any rate, the advantages of commencing dinner with soup are manifest in the saving of the meat bills, and economy practiced in utilizing scraps of all kinds for the making of the soups, and the comfortable sensation experienced after a little has been taken; for let any person who feels, as the saying goes, "too hungry to eat," swallow a few spoonfuls of soup, and the feeling of exhaustion will quickly pass away. Indeed, a well known authority has said that nothing tends more to restore the tone of the stomach and make easy digestion than a little soup.—Cassell's Magazine.

Aunt-Woman's Rights Fable.

A bear once fell in love with a Setting Hen, and told her one day that she might go to a picnic and he would hatch out her eggs for her. She consented, and the gallant Bear took his position on the nest in the regulation manner, but soon got up, looking as if he had been reclining in a bed of eggs as a substitute for an armchair. "The next Hen I fall in love with must deber her own hatching," he remarked in thought in great disgust, as he took his melancholy departure, "I hatched out the eggs at the very first clatter, but there are no chickens in them." Moral: This fable teaches that some duties pertaining to the domestic economy are too subtle and mysterious to be brilliantly discharged by the Lords of Creation.

THE DYING SOLDIER.

Gen. Grant's Obstinate Battle with Death.

New York dispatches of the morning of the 4th inst. report Gen. Grant to have had a restless night, but all things considered, was in no worse condition than he had been for several days previous. The General rested peacefully Saturday night, the 4th, and took his nourishment regularly. In the forenoon of Sunday he enjoyed the genial warmth of the sunshine stilling at his window, and remarked that he suffered no unusual pain. Four physicians held a consultation in the afternoon, and after a thorough examination of his throat it was agreed that the local conditions were improved. The treatment of the past few days was commended, but on his departure from the house Dr. Shrady stated that the throat gave no stronger, and the expression of other visitors was that there was no room for hope. During the early hours of the evening the patient was in a cheerful frame of mind, and received his brother Simon, and Col. Fred Grant. At first he rather shrank from the ordeal of greeting his son, but gave one to each of his four children and Mrs. Grant. He spoke but little during the day to several sled engravings of himself. They were presented to personal friends. During the night the throat failed a number of times, while he talked to the doctors on the following morning. He thought he was off tramping somewhere and had lost a single satchel. He thought he was very poor, only half-dressed, and without money. This worried him a good deal, although, as he said: 'I thought I ought to be used to it by this.' He left himself altogether in a bad predicament, without money and without friends. He came to a fence and got over it very awkwardly, there being a stile on one side only. When he got over he found that he had left the satchel on the other side and that he could not get it unless he paid duty on every step of the stile as he went back. Then he thought he would go back home and borrow the money of Mrs Grant. He found he had only $2 and that was not enough, and then he was very glad to wake up. The general said his sensations during the dream were very real, and that he had been much troubled with the annoying adventures which had happened to him. He could not explain what led him to use this train of thought. Dr Shrady left the house at 7 P. M. He said that the general's condition was almost a counterpart of that he left this morning, except that he was more restless. He "stared and muttered" and turned and tossed all night. "Yes, I feel much refreshed." Now, Ulysses, the war is to an end. Lee is a—" stop that was until 2 a. m., and when I ask at this time how you are, you are to say you are better." I did not wish to agitate my conscience." That I am sure you will be better." "I will agree to be If you will keep up the same line of action. Tell Dr. Douglass to do as while I am gone." "Certainly I will. We intend to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." The general laughed at the humor of this joke. The general is himself fully aware of the fact that he is in a critical condition, and that he has had a hard struggle with death. He had a brief interview with his son Ulysses, on Monday, which he described as "very pleasant." Ulysses left the room and Col. Fred Grant came in. He said: "Fred, I have had a hard struggle with death." "Yes, it is hard," said Senator Chaffee, "but we were

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

In view of the effort to concentrate a few more manufacturing enterprises in Charlevoix, there is one thing to which we wish to call attention. One year ago the newspapers of this town advertised our resources and advantages to a very large and liberal extent, and on the opening of navigation there were numerous calls for business places. One man wanted to put in a stock of fancy goods, put could find no suitable salesroom, and besides was told that he would not be encouraged to go into competition with the stores who were already engaged in that trade. Another man wanted to embark in the dry goods business, but could not get suitable rooms and went elsewhere. Another wanted a water front to engage in the manufacture of wooden bowls, and made a partial agreement for a site, but while at dinner the owner of the lot concluded that if the man really meant business the lot was worth at least five hundred dollars more than he first asked. The buyer did not raise, and we are informed he afterwards found a good site and located at Mancelona. A gentleman from Charlotte looked over this county, desiring to manufacture agricultural implements, using both our iron and hardwood lumber, but could not see the money in the water fronts that was asked, and located elsewhere. No doubt a dozen other similar cases can be recalled (we personally know of several more) where men who wanted to locate here were turned away either by high prices of property or were discouraged by rivals in business. Now if our people are able to dictate who shall and who shall not locate here, it is all right, perhaps. We have frequently observed that really progressive towns encourage everything that wants to come. Lake a dew clothier, sell a site at some price before the customer leaves town. Charlevoix must make up her mind to do just that thing before she progresses. The dead lock in property must be broken.

The Official Count.

As a matter of record we this week reprint our figures on the county seat removal and state officers. It will be seen that there are no important changes from those first published, in Eveline and Norwood the figures in county seat were in some manner overlooked by the canvassers, and those here given are unofficial, as furnished by our correspondents.

For state officers Charlevoix cast three votes for the prohibition ticket. Morse's majority in the county is 416, while the republican regents have majorities of 94 and 95 respectively. In Chandler there were no democratic or national tickets at the polls, possibly through some misunderstanding between the two committees of distribution, but some good work was done for Morse with slips.

A Democratic Victory.

At time of going to press last week, we had no returns from the state, and the local returns were not such as to indicate the election of the democratic regents, therefore we said that the apparent election of Morse for supreme judge was not a democratic victory, in a political sense. But the later returns, showing the election of Morse by over 35,000, and the democratic regents by not far from 20,000, makes it indeed a democratic victory with an old-time republican majority. It is a democratic victory of which we all as a party may feel proud, and which, without any doubt has "come to stay."

Notice To Wage-Workers.

The Michigan Bureau of Labor and Industrial Statistics is conducting an extended inquiry into the condition, wants, and prospects of the wage-workers of this State. An invitation is given to all employes, male or female, over 18 years of age, who are desirous of, or willing to answer the questions prepared by the Bureau, to send their address, plainly written on a postal card, to the Commissioner of Labor at Lansing, Michigan.

Blanks containing questions specially prepared, with a view to securing from wage-workers reliable information bearing upon the subject of labor in which they are personally interested, will be sent to each addressed, together with stamped envelope for returning the blanks when filled out, to the Bureau.

By giving these questions prompt and candid attention, with full and free answers, a valuable service will be rendered to the wage-workers of Michigan and to the State. No names given to the Bureau will be made public, but held in strict confidence.

Political Paragraphs.

Queen Victoria, herself an invalid at Aix les Baius, graciously inquires by telegraph after the condition of Gen. Grant.

The impudent boast that "anybody can carry Michigan for the republican ticket" has been repudiated with an emphasis which carries complete assurance against any repetitions.—[Detroit Free Press.

Under the heading, "Wanted a Leader," the Detroit Evening News pays a glowing tribute to Zack Chandler, whose leadership carried the republican party to success, and whose death marked the beginning of the downfall of the party.

According to the good old republican way of expressing the thing, Michigan is "loyal." Grand old Michigan! The government at Washington is democratic, and Michigan is democratic. What greater proof of Michigan's loyalty could be desired?—Chicago Herald.

Only a day or two ago the Russians were planting torpedoes at Cronstadt and Odessa. If war is inevitable the British Navy cannot proceed to pay its respects to the great Russian seaports too soon. And the sooner they are cleared the better the price of American wheat.—N. Y. World.

Historical Society.

On Tuesday evening, April 1st, at the residence of 20 Mrs. L. A. Ayer a large number of members and invited guests were present and a very interesting program carried out.

A paper was read written by the president, Mrs. Ayer, which was received with a short eulogy by Messrs. Bradbeer and Carleton. Paper by Robert Moffatt, extremely interesting, being reading, writing, arithmetic, music, and the law (Mrs. Hosea and Mrs. Clark, reading by Mrs. Bartholomew, with a recitation read by Miss Carleton, Miss Mabel Moffatt, Miss Mamie Ingersoll solo, piano selection rendered by Miss Maud Loveday. The society wishes to express our obligations to Mrs. Ayer for her kindness in the parties in the Bridge street Home for the missing hour and a half spent with all members and many friends present on Tuesday eve., April 28.

Spring is very tardy in its approach, though recent heavy rains have taken off most of the snow. The ice in the lake is as solid as ever.

John Bay, Jr., left here on the 8th with three teams loaded with fresh fish, bound for Harbor Springs. He expects to bring back full loads of merchandise.

Manitou county has been represented as being republican in politics, but a glance at the election returns of last Monday will show something different. The town of Chandler polled 84 democratic and 8 republican votes. The others elected are:

Supervisor—Fred Batts.
Clerk—Wm. J. Gallagher.
Treasurer—William Gibson.
Justice—James Moore.
School Inspectors—James Gibson and Wm. J. Gallagher.

The town of Prairie polled 88 democratic and 9 republican votes. The others elected are:

Supervisor—Anthony O'Donnell.
Clerk—Francis Dudley.
Treasurer—F. D. Gallagher.

Highway Commissioner—Wm. Gallagher.

Things were warm all day in this town.

The town of Gaillee will have at least thirty democratic votes. James E. McCauley was re-elected Supervisor, Dominic Gallagher, Clerk, and Y. Mc Donough, Treasurer.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—How do you suppose that father felt on the reply he got from Rev. C. F. Van Anker, to which he referred in his address on Sunday evening? That father said, "I am drunk or let it alone, but there is no sin in years old, he can't let it alone, he must get drunk." The idea presented by the Elder, that the sin inherited the inclination for strong drink, is only twofold. May every reader study this eternal physical law of nature; the transmission of inclinations.

Last Sunday evening the people of Charlevoix were treated to a masterly discourse on the evils of intemperance, by Rev. C. F. Van Anken, at the Congregational church. More of the same kind would be appreciated, and productive of good results.

Cooper & Cooper have just received a number of fine furniture catalogues, by the aid of which the customer can make selections of the best and richest goods without their being carried in stock. This better enables the firm to compete with larger houses.

We are still of the opinion, Mr. Record, notwithstanding your long-winded arguments (?), that your criticism of the cantata troupe was unmerciful severe. It is not a falsehood, as intimated, that Charlevoix people feel insulted, though certain "members of the company" may have made severe criticisms in the editor's presence. However, this feature is too delicate to discuss here where the history of the organization and reorganization is so well known. The persistence with which this criticism is followed is but another instance of the disposition on the part of Petoskey papers to belittle everything from Charlevoix regardless of its merits.

L. Widekind has made and sold quite a number of maps of Charlevoix county, and plats of Charlevoix village, and is now engaged on a set of plats of all the villages in the county, which, when completed, will make a valuable addition to any office that secures them.

The ladies of the Congregational society gave another of their excellent socials at the church last evening, the refreshments being warm sugar and biscuit. An interesting musical program was provided, including also a recitation by Mrs. Harsha, which was heartily applauded.

"One of the teachers in this district walks 760 miles during the three terms she teaches. Four miles a day."—Ex. Pretty good for a woman. C. B. Glass, of Charlevoix, walked eight miles a day during his three months term just closed, a total of 520 miles, and some of the time was most persistent cold weather.

It has heretofore been announced in these columns that G. W. Crouter was building a drug store at Ironton. The building is now completed, the first shipment of stock put in, and business nicely started. It will be under the immediate supervision of Mr. J. M. Harris, who has also an interest, the firm being known as Crouter & Harris. The location is a good one, and we have no doubt the venture will be successful in all respects.

L. D. Bartholomew returned home Tuesday. He reports the season in the south four to six weeks late; that in Alabama they are just plowing for cotton, when it should have been planted a month ago; and that in Cincinnati he experienced a nasty, disagreeable snow storm,—as bad or worse than we have here. Perhaps, after all, those who think of moving away from here on account of the long cold winter will not gain much.

The county seat question of Charlevoix county was settled by ballot in Monday's election, the majority of the voters deciding to remove the county seat from Charlevoix, the beautiful little village in the north-western part of the county, to East Jordan, located near the southern line. An elegant building was completed at Charlevoix last fall for the county offices, and now some $50,000 will have to be expended in the erection of a suitable building at East Jordan."—Saginaw Courier.

The Grand Rapids Democrat is progressing, surely. Some time ago it tried to get possession of the plans for the proposed new city hall for the purpose of reproducing them in the paper, but was refused. A few days later the "official" design was exhibited in a show window and a "special artist" was employed by the paper to set up a camera in front of that window for a very brief time. The photograph so obtained was then sent to a photo-engraving house in Chicago, and the cut returned in time to be printed in the issue of the paper announcing the acceptance of the design and the letting of the contract. This is real enterprise.

Chas. S. Hampton, in the last Independent, discusses the proposed soldier's home, and thinks he sees a job in it for the benefit of Lansing or some city in the southern part of the state. He says that a better and more practicable plan than the one proposed "would be to accept the proposition of H. B. Chapman, of Bay Springs, to sell the State his big hotel, the "Tourists Home," together with the land, for a soldiers' home. The location is pleasant and healthful, and is easily accessable. As a hotel it is a failure, and the owner would be glad to sell for $25,000, which is $10,000 less than it cost. The building is well embedded for the purpose, and an expense of two or three thousand dollars would fit it already for occupancy in 30 days, whereas such a building as the ring are after could not be ready in less than two or three years. An appropriation of from fifty to seventy five thousand dollars would be enough to purchase, fit up and maintain this place as a soldiers' home for two years, and if the State must provide a home we do not think there is any other place so economical and feasible."

Chas. Ely, who is traveling in the interest of Smith's patent railroad cuspidor, has just sent in an order for 25 to be used by the F. & P. M. R. R. This is the first order from a railroad, but over 60 have been sold for hotels and saloons, and the work has hardly begun. There is evidently a bonanza in this thing for the inventor and owners.

The Lansing Sunday Siftings, has changed hands cut off a large portion of the name and now stands as The Sun, is very much improved in typographical appearance, and is now a very respectable city newspaper. Our old friend "Jack" Stephenson, a veteran printer and newspaper man, for a long time proof reader in the state printing office, is one of the new firm.

"The Herald has already noted the fact that H. B. Chapman had offered the "Tourists' Home," at Bay Springs, to the state, for a reasonable sum, for the proposed soldiers' and sailors' home. This home is a large and handsome new hotel, costing the proprietor away up into the tens of thousands of dollars, and it is, we understand, admirably adapted for the purposes of such an institution as the state talks of establishing. It is well located, on one of the most beautiful lakes in the state, in a healthy locality, and the Herald would be glad to see this section made."—[Traverse Herald.

There are a few chronic gossips in town who seem to have no pleasure except when retailing a scandalous story about some neighbor, and they have succeeded in keeping society in a ferment and petty jealous warfare for months. One of the best things that could happen to the town would be a stroke of lightning, or paralysis, or something of that sort, to every person who will repeat a scandal. It has been said, and sometimes we think justly, that the gossip and scandal monger, is the vilest moral leper in community, the worst enemy to society and the church, and far more dangerous to the rising generation than the worst slums and dives along our streets.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever." This will apply forcibly to the tourists guide book of the G. R. & I. R. R. for 1886. Mechanically, the work is got ten up in the most modern style of the printers art, and is embellished with new and accurate illustrations reproduced by photographs from actual scenes. Two full page scenes of Charlevoix are given, one looking west from the top of the Chicago club houses showing the whole of Round lake, with all the docks and business houses; the other looking northeast from the highest point of the terrace of the Charlevoix resort, and showing the Belvedere house and all the cottages on mail near Breezy Point with the Chicago resort in the distance. The work is accompanied with a folder describing briefly the chief points of interest in northern Michigan, and time tables showing how to reach there in the easiest manner.

SPINNING.

Like a tiried spinner in the sun,
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task,
And, being blind, no more I ask.

I do not know the use or name
Of that I spin;
I only know that some one came,
And laid within
My hand the thread, and said: "Since you
Are blind but one thing you can do."

Sometimes the threads so rough and fast
And tangled fly,
I know with sorrow are sweeping past,
And fear that I
Shall fail, but dare not try to find
A safer place, since I am blind.

I know not why, but I am sure
That this and place
In some great fabric to endure
Just these and these
My threads will have; so from the first,
Though blind, I never feared a worst.

I think, perhaps, this trust has sprung
From one brief word
Said over me when I was young
So young I heard
It, knowing not that words can be signed
My know, and sealed me Her, though blind.

But whether this be real or sign
Within, without,
It matters little. The kind divine
I never doubt.
I know He set me here, and still,
And glad, and blind, I wait His will;

But listen, listen, day by day,
To learn when need
Who hear His touch most sweet may,
And ever the thread,
And bring each message in its sun,
"Thou goes bland spinner, work is done."

DOUX SOUVENIR.

The room was one of those harmonious little bowers often seen in these sedate days. Nora had fallen in love with the description of a violet boudoir, and when her taste was consulted about her own boudoir she unhesitatingly declared it should be hung and furnished in shades of purple from the deepest to the palest, and it was done.

On this afternoon her own dress harmonized with the room. Violet silk and velvet trailed over the purple carpet, and a band of sparkling amethyst violets bound her golden hair. Even the air was laden with faint fragrance of the fresh flowers.

Nora was seated at the piano playing, while Philip Leighton leaned his fair head against the dark damask of an easy chair, and listened with half-closed eyes. His violin lay lovingly against his heart, and his fingers absently drummed the shrill air already held the bow.

"Hey No. 1 of the Leader," he said, as she paused with a faint, inquiring chord; "the one which they call 'Sweet Remembrance.'"

She turned slightly, and opened her eyes to refuse, then resolutely continue, she began to play. Philip's eyes were half closed, and he watched her covertly, as with his head bent musically and soft, fringed eyes, she played it through with rare feeling, but evident pain. Under the dark, there passed through his mind the thought of a cruel wind drawing before it two forms with trees he knew. As the last note died away Nora rose so pale and wan that Philip stood to his feet, looking at her in surprise, but almost instantly her color returned, and she laughed lightly.

"I once read," he said, quietly, as he pressed himself in his purple chair, "a very strange story about every one having a keynote. A certain note in the scale dominated over them in some mysterious fashion, and every one who discovered this possessed a singular power over the person who responded to it. The story pretended that this was universal. I think it fanciful myself, though I have never tried to prove it. I am certain, however, that I have found a combination of sounds which has a strange effect upon you, Nora. Why do you never play that piece without it? Was it composed?"

Again a slight shudder passed over her, but after a moment's hesitation she replied:

"I don't know. That it is so true, and although I am unconscious of playing one chord from it, too, is also true; after playing it, people have sometimes come up and ordered me a fan or a hankerchief, as if they thought me fainting."

"What does it make you think of?" he asked.

"Of the wind. Whenever named it Doux Souvenir' must have had dimly out was from mine. It also makes me think of a second part."

"I repeat me."

Nora shut her fingers down by the white keys, and turned her head half one to the other, but sadness fell on her to shut the air.

"Philip carried in Nora and laid her on a lounge, while the other hastened to shut the door. Then while she lay with head, her white and still, too weak to open her eyes, she heard the stranger say, "Philip, old friend, forgive me if I have been too candid for."

Philip only answered, quietly, "Where is she now?"

Nora grasped the artist; "dead for two months since. You never cared for her, and I would have given my life to save her. Do not accuse me so."

"Nora," he whispered passionately, "you are not to blame. Look at me, and hold her in the very softly, lovingly, the surprise of the moment has so hurried me that I have not yet fully realized it. Nora, you must not be hurried."

"Nay, I will not be hurried," she said, "now it is possible that is what has hastened me. I will tell you what I feel. Dear Nora, and the same love come to would be happy now. I could see no one, of every problem and renders the work but there was, your color a possibly those weary forms drifting coming. Nora, I will take this opportunity to say that I do not wish you to see so much of Philip."

"Oh, papa, he had nothing to do with my fainting—nothing at all."

"Do you know," said her father, slowly, "all the circumstances of Philip's life?"

"No," she answered frankly. "I do not. I only know there is something painful in his past, about which no one speaks."

"It concerns a woman," began her father, then he hesitated.

"Papa," said Nora, "if you wish to tell me anything, whatever it may be, do not be afraid of agitating me. Philip has never made love to me; is nothing to me, as you seem to fear."

"Ah, then," in a tone of relief, "you ought to know the story. Philip is married, and his wife is supposed to be living."

In spite of herself Nora shivered and turned pale.

"Well, when did this happen? Please tell me all," she said, as quietly as she could.

"It isn't a long story, and it's not a very romantic one. He was drawn into the thing when a college youth. He married his landlady's daughter privately; and six weeks after she ran away with his most intimate friend. All this before his college course was finished. He took no steps to trace his wife, and there the matter rested."

"I am glad you told me this, papa," Nora said, simply. "One ought to be posted upon these matters."

Her manner then and after was so calm that her father congratulated himself on his timely revelation. "I might have been too late," he said to himself.

Days passed. Philip did not appear. Then one day a package came to Nora, containing a very small copy of "Doux Souvenir," exquisitely bound in violet. From the pages dropped a note:

"Nora—I have seen your father, who tells me you know all; this has brought me to a sense of my own peril, and I feel I dare not meet you again.

"PHILIP."

Nora told herself she should not, would not, care, and she forced herself to be brave; but she did care for all that, and she told away "Doux Souvenir," its first and last piece she never played it now. Still her life went on the same; and one evening she found herself in the artists' reception in company with some friends. Exquisitely dressed groups passed on and on before the beautiful pictures, the air was filled with sweet sounds and the scent of rare flowers, and Nora was almost forgetting herself. There was a pause in the music, and her friends were chatting gayly around her, when softly, sweetly from an adjoining room came the long-loved air, "Doux Souvenir." Turning quickly, Nora met Philip's eyes.

She stepped forward. "I must speak to you this once," he said.

With a word of excuse to her friends she took his offered arm and walked with him up and down, always within sound of the song.

"Nora," he whispered passionately, "I can not keep away from you. I must live without you. Speak one word to strengthen me, to comfort me."

But the same, new feeling was on her face, and she stopped suddenly. Her eyes were on a picture hanging near. Two shadowy forms driven by a terrible, cruel wind, and the low, sad meaning of the song might have been the sound of its passing.

His sad eyes followed hers, his face, grew deathly white.

"I accept the portent," he sighed; "it is a warning. Come away, Nora, come away. Oh, come!"

"Nay," she answered, dreamily, "I would rather stay."

"Nora," he pleaded, "won't you listen to me? I implore you, for my sake, if you will not for your own."

"I can not move," she whispered; "something holds me to the spot."

The look of torture passed, a look of fear, followed by one of sudden relief, as a young artist passed close to him. "Ernest!" he said, addressing him, "please stop that music. I will explain later—only be quick!"

An exclamation of surprise and pain escaped the artist's lips, but the next moment he dashed forward, saying: "The lady has fainted! Here, Stanley, Wilson, come! Some one bring water! A small diver beside them, which had been come aid by dreary curtain, and pushed it open.

Two shadowy figures thrown by the wind, both with white faces, both bent one to the other; but sadness fell on to a last the air. Then white one lay as dead, her white and still, too weak to open her eyes, she heard the stranger say, "Philip, old friend, forgive me if I have been too candid for."

Philip only answered, quietly, "Where is she now?"

Nora grasped the artist; "dead for two months since. You never cared for her, and I would have given my life to save her. Do not accuse me so."

"Nora," he whispered passionately, "you are not to blame. Look at me, and hold her in the very softly, lovingly, the surprise of the moment has so hurried me that I have not yet fully realized it. Nora, you must not be hurried."

"Nay, I will not be hurried," she said, "now it is possible that is what has hastened me. I will tell you what I feel. Dear Nora, and the same love come to would be happy now. I could see no one, of every problem and renders the work but there was, your color a possibly those weary forms drifting facts place to see.

hither and thither—one, ah! one was like you, only a shadow, and the other——"

"She is dead now," he said, hoarsely "let her rest."

Nora turned gently and gave him her hand. "I am sorry for you," she said.

Then Philip drew her away. Without a word he took her back to her friends and he his solicux and left. She did not see him again for months. Then one day, when she was in her violet room, he came.

"I want to try an experiment," he said, after greeting her. "Have you ever played 'Doux Souvenir' since that night?"

"Never," she replied.

"Do so now."

Nora shrank and shivered.

"I am certain the spell is gone," he said. "You have seen the picture in reality. You will not fear it now."

Then she obeyed. First came the hushed prelude, then the sighing, tender song, then the wailing sadness of the closing phrase; but her face no longer paled, a bright flush covered her cheeks, perfect peace Philip's arm was held round her, while her happy head leaned on his breast.

HISTORICAL.

The Mazarin Bible was so called from having been found in the Cardinal's library. It was the first book printed with metal types, and cost $2,500.

The old north of England phrase, "to carry coals to Newcastle," finds its parallel in the Persian tumult of "carrying pepper to Hindustan," and in the Hebrew, "to carry oil to the City of Olives."

At one time the Finlanders and Lapinders drove a profitable trade by the sale of winds. After being paid they knotted three magical knots and told the buyer that when he untied the first he would have a good gale, when the second a strong wind, and when the third a severe tempest.

Sour Frenchmen who landed on the coast of Guinea many years ago, found a negro prince seated under a tree on a block of wood for his throne, and three or four negroes armed with wooden spears for his guard. His sable majesty anxiously inquired, "Do they talk much of me in France?"

Leonard Price, who died in New York City in March, 1862, at the age of eighty-one years, was a sergeant of a New York State artillery corps, as a volunteer in the war of 1812. He suggested to the War Department both rifled cannon and conical balls, which now perform destructive work at long distances; but he was not listened to. President Madison was also entitled to the genius of the sergeant that he was commissioned a lieutenant in the regular army of the United States.

An attempt is being made to account for the remarkable powers exhibited by some dogs on the presumption that the nervous system of such is altogether distinct and different from the sense of smell. This is as all philosophers must know, a misconception. The truth is that each species of animal has some specially developed faculty of relation by which it is, more than by other beings, placed in close proximity to the external world. The differences are great even among small classes of beings; for example, coarse dogs scent one sight more than smell—as the greyhound. The scent of smell is, however, generally developed to a high pitch among those animals which have in a state of subjection, but for their keep as sweet pointers or scenters. There is nothing that we can perceive difficult to understand in the intelligence exhibited by the lower animals. The scientific deduction of each phenomenon developed must afford a satisfactory solution, and every problem and renders the facts plain to see.

THE CANADIAN REVOLT.

The Government Taking Prompt Measures to Suppress the Rebellion.

Causes of the Trouble—Character of the Rebels—Feelings to the Reserv.

Causes of the Trouble.

J. L. Bowen, of Calgary, Northwest Territory, arrived in Chicago the other day, and was promptly interviewed. In speaking of the rebellion in Manitoba, Mr. Bowen said the residents throughout the Northwest are greatly excited, and even at his place, which is 300 miles west of the scene of the present troubles, the people are making active preparations to resist a general Indian outbreak. Mr. Bowen, however, is of the opinion that the rebels will not go so far west unless Riel and his followers should advance in that direction, in which case the Blackfeet and neighboring Indians, numbering three thousand fighting men, might join in the rebellion with the hope of securing plunder. The Crees, who are located in the extreme northwestern part of the territory, and number full 15,000, he believes are only waiting for a favorable opportunity to join Riel. The latter has already sent emissaries among the three tribes, and is using every argument to induce them to join him. The Blackfeet and others are poorly equipped for war, but the Crees have an abundant supply of arms and ammunition, and if they should attach themselves to the rebels the outbreak will become a very serious matter. Referring to the causes of the trouble, Mr. Bowen said that for some time there had been general dissatisfaction in the territory on account of the British Government refusing to recognize the land claims of the natural settlers as against the governmental grantees, and heretofore the sympathy had nearly all been with the half-breed settlers. The recent outbreak, however, and the loss of life had created a reaction there. He fears the uprising seems to be general that the claim of the half-breeds was a just one, and should have been allowed by the English Government. When asked about the future career of Riel, Mr. Bowen said he believed that Riel would eventually desert his men and seek safety for himself in the United States, and that the Government would respect the half-breeds with a grant of land, and thus prevent further trouble.

Character of the Rebels.

A recent dispatch from Ottawa, Canada, says: A gentleman, now living here, who was at one time in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company, tells something of the character of the rebels who are now fighting the uprising in the Northwest. He says that after the Red River rebellion a number of them left the Saskatchewan district and located on Milk River, in the very nature of things it could not be long before they would come into collision with the British Government. A number of them had been organized and disciplined, so that they could be relied upon for some time to come. The horses will be furnished to renders, and many who will join will, no doubt, leave their own animals. Many of the men still have arms themselves, but to those who have not the Government will supply.

UNCLE SAM AROUSED.

Details of the Burning of Aspinwall by the Colombian Insurgents.

Prompt Action Looking to the Protection of American Interests on the Isthmus.

Prompt Action by the Washington Authorities.

[Washington telegram.]

In answer to a telegram sent last night by Secretary Whitney, of the Navy Department, to the President of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at New York, relative to the number of men the company's vessels can take to Aspinwall without delay, the following reply was received this morning:

"We can carry 200 men in the City of Para to-morrow at noon, and 600 in the Acapulco next Monday."

Secretary Whitney replied:

"We will send 200 men by your steamer to-morrow noon, with tents and camp equipage. The Tennessee, with Admiral Jouett, will leave New Orleans probably to-day, with an extra complement of marines for Aspinwall, and such extra provisions. This will place four ships and between 400 and 500 available men at Aspinwall for land service. As to Monday's steamer, I will communicate hereafter. The men will be taken from the Brooklyn Navy Yard."

In reply to a telegram sent to Commander Kane, of the Galena, the following was also received to-day:

"Transit is closed. The steamship property is safe in my possession; also the railroad property at the north end of the island. It is advisable to send another vessel."

It is understood that Maj. Chas. Hayward, of the Marine Corps, who is in charge of the marine barracks at Brooklyn, will have immediate command of the marines. A naval officer of rank, however, will probably be detailed to command the expedition.

Capt. Kane Defended.

There was considerable excitement in naval circles over the news of the uprising at Aspinwall, and the burning of that city. The censure of Capt. Kane, of the Galena, says a Washington special, for not firing on the rebels was regarded by many as unjust, in the absence of full particulars. Those familiar with affairs at Colon—which is the Colombian name for Aspinwall—say there was no doubt whatever that Capt. Kane must have been in consultation with the leading railroad, steamship, and business men of that place, and that his movements were governed by their advice. Had Capt. Kane fired on the rebels and thus caused any property loss, the United States would probably have been called upon to pay damages. This, and also the fact that the officers and men of the Galena would probably have been confined in prison, and the vessel seized, if any thing had been done by them, are considered sufficient reasons for Capt. Kane's action. The Galena is now at Colon, and is probably ready for any emergency.

The Burning of Aspinwall.

The particulars of the burning of Colon (Aspinwall) and the burning of that city are still meagerly reported, says a Panama dispatch. The attack upon the rebel chief Preston by the Colombian troops was followed by Col. Urbas. Preston's forces were routed after a severe engagement. As soon as Preston became convinced that it would be impossible for him to maintain his position he set fire to the city in various places and then made his escape. Only a few of his followers succeeded in getting away with him. The city is almost a complete ruin. Only three houses are left standing. Much distress prevails among the people who have been rendered homeless.

The following dispatch has been received at Philadelphia by Mr. Atkinson, acting Consul General Adamson, of Aspinwall:

Colon has been totally destroyed by fire. Its suffering is awful. In my name invoke all editors to ask subscriptions for relief.

Dr. Reynolds' Work in Michigan.

Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, of Red Ribbon fame, came into our State by invitation of the W. C. T. U., and began a campaign about the holidays.

The meetings have not raised the commotion, which made his reform work eight years ago so phenomenal, but if any one supposes the effort a failure in any sense, or that Dr. Reynolds has lost his strange power over men, they are wholly mistaken.

Everywhere, with one or two exceptions he has been greeted with overflowing houses, while hundreds have signed the total abstinence pledge and started for a new manhood.

Dr. Reynolds does not bring men to the pledge on the foam of oratorial excitement, but goes down to the centers of conviction, and manhood, and discovers, rather than rescues, the man.

One interesting fact has been developed by his coming again to Michigan, which is, that large numbers of the men who signed the pledge eight years ago, have always been true to it; and many are today in homes of comfort, and places of wealth and influence, who owe their salvation, under God to this noble self-forgetful reformer, who called them to the right path.

The campaign for total abstinence this winter, has faced hard times, the prejudice carried over from the campaign, towards all lines of temperance effort, and divided opinions even among friends, while even worse, professed Christian people young and old, have been so absorbed with "progressive euchre" and roller skating that they have had no time to help the fallen, to seek the lost, or strengthen the weary limbs of those who work for God.

Dr. Reynolds is giving a strangely disinterested life to this work. The heroic wife who was at his side in all his toil eight years ago, is in the kingdom where no drunkard may enter, and he carries his own burden for himself and his motherless children, while he seeks to bless others.

At this peculiar stage of the temperance reform, no better thing can be done for a town than to secure the Doctor for a few meetings.

His time is full for some weeks ahead, but dates and terms can be learned by writing to Mrs. R. A. Campbell, Traverse City.

MARY T. LATHROP,
Pres. S. W. C. T. U.

It is with feelings of pride, and pleasure that we find the following glowing tribute of praise, bestowed upon our honored President of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, one of Michigan's brightest intellects, and most noble women, commissioned by "High Heaven" to raise the fallen and rescue the perishing. We bless God for a Mary T. Lathrop, and would there were many such as she. We quote from a New Orleans paper of recent date:

The annual State Convention of the Louisiana Women's Christian Temperance Union held its final session yesterday, after meetings most brilliant and eminently satisfactory to the noble workers who have done so much for the temperance cause, not only here, but all over the country.

The closing session was held at night in Annes Chapel, a large audience being present to listen to an address by Mrs. Mary Lathrop, who, it must be said, has made a great conquest over the New Orleans people who have had the very good fortune to hear her speak. It is universally conceded that Mrs. Lathrop is as brilliant, as witty, as practical and logical as any gentleman who ever addressed a New Orleans audience, and that, perhaps, is just as much praise and as high praise as any woman ought to ever have to win. While Mrs. Lathrop speaks, interest never flags, attention is never distracted and none grow weary. Her lecture last evening was a powerful protest against the crimes of intemperance, a practical explanation of the evils of it, of the inevitable woes of it." Traverse Eagle.

Whiskey Did It.

Grayling, Apr. 3. A log train ran over a man early this morning about 8 miles north of the place, completely severing the head from the body. Investigation showed that the deed was done while walking into named Berney B Hanson, about 35 years of age, who lived near Frederickville. He had just finished a logging job for Sullivan Hanson & Co., came down there to settle up, and became intoxicated toward the train, started for home on foot and went to sleep on the track. He had on his person $190 and a big jack-knife in his hand. Also a bottle nearly empty.

ALL ABOUT TEETH.

A Few Moments With the Dentists.

"A woman with fine teeth and a sweet breath cannot be ugly," was a saying of Jean Jacques Rousseau that modern dentists never tire of quoting. Beautiful, white, even teeth never fail to attract admiration to their possessor, while a mouthful, or even two or three, protruding teeth will mar the highest type of beauty. Some otherwise pretty mouths are rendered unsightly by an overabundance of teeth which are so crowded as to overlay one another, and if the upper lip be short the effect is anything but agreeable. Others have two long upper teeth that are known as "squirrel teeth" and make it difficult to keep the mouth closed. With the present perfection in dentistry the first defect can be readily corrected by extracting one or more of the teeth, loosening the others and training them into a natural position. Nothing can be done with "squirrel" and "dog teeth" but to replace them with false ones, which are nowadays better than the original, and, besides being perfectly comfortable, defy detection. All cannot have perfectly white teeth, for there is as much difference in the shade of enamel as there is in hair, but soiled, unkept teeth are an abomination. Whether false or natural the same care is necessary to neatness as less than health.

The most common disease of the teeth is tartar, a calcareous deposit due to the excess of lime in the saliva and a lack of care in cleaning. This annoyance has received the most careful consideration of medical dentists, and there are almost as many theories current as there are students. Some enthusiasts on the subject of germs uphold the theory of animalcules. They advance the argument that the insect is supplied with tentacular or feelers which enable it to grasp and gather in the sediment contained in liquid and some solid foods, just as the coral appropriates the lime of salt water. These zoophytes make their habitation on that part of the gum which projects up between the teeth. It is noticeable that in certain localities where hard or mineral waters are found the people are more troubled with tartaric teeth than those who consume soft water. While many erudite students hold to this theory, the common belief is that particles of food are allowed to collect on the flap of the gum overlapping the neck of the teeth, forming a lodgment for the lime in the saliva.

Said a dentist: "It takes some little time to cleanse the teeth properly—that is, using freely the vertical movement instead of the horizontal, and going over the whole set twice at least, the last time with clear water, to remove any jot of tartar which might have been left. As for the brush, we always recommend just as hard and stiff a brush as may be used without making the gums bleed. Irritation will not hurt them, but it is not safe to rupture them. On the other hand, a soft bristle is little better than nothing, for the hairs bend under pressure and fail to clean the surface to which they are applied."

Disease of the gums and injury to the teeth from spurious dentifrices are not common, but there is danger nevertheless to be apprehended by some preparations. Nearly all powders contain borax, an element that is very cleansing, but deleterious to the gums and teeth. Strong tooth-washes are highly injurious on account of the powerful alkali they contain. Charcoal, ground and never be used unless subjected to great pressure and intense heat. It is cleansing, refreshing, and considerable of an antiseptic, but a pernicious enemy to the enamel, for it cannot be converted to fine as to obliterate the needle-like fineness of the fibres. So it is to be feared to carbon, as the crystals are so soluble, be it not sufficient for the requirements. It leaves the mouth refreshed and stimulates the circulation, but if the gums are sensitive it is apt to smart them. It is a safe rule for to publish an acquaintance or compound, no matter how eligible it may be or how much benefit it may be to the teeth, that irritates the gums and leaves the mouth parched and drawn. The best dentifrice known to science is a combination of orris root, soap powder, prepared chalk, and perfume, or camphorated leaves, which any tooth-cleaning powder contains will compose.

The teeth are not intended to be used as nut crackers, nor for biting open fresh and tearing off flesh. Acid vegetables and fruits, especially lemons, are injurious to the teeth, but the former, if eaten with meat, counteracts the evil effects of the latter. Cracking nuts with the teeth, and pinching off thread with one another, are also very destructive habits. Cleanliness, says a dentist, requires more

Concise Record of the Week.

THE DYING SOLDIER.

Gen. Grant's Obstinate Battle with Death

The condition of Gen. Grant on the morning of the 14th, as reported by the despatches of that date, was worse than at any time for several days previous. He had a bad, coughing spell the evening before, and the physicians advanticed a gradual development of abscess in the throat. The pain in his throat kept the patient tossing about on his couch, restless, wakeful, and anxious, and he complained frequently of his inability to sleep. He cannot lie from his couch to the arm-chair three or four times in order to stop the consultant cough and to breathe with greater ease, but he was so much settled in one position than he wished to change again. Sleep was induced by the administration of morphine. His mind, however, was unsettled to more serious than previous days, and he was more restless. His pulse and breathing therefore did not change. In speaking to persons about him, the sick man was by himself, and his delirium appeared to be somewhat delirious, making now and then references to his participation in battles during the war. He recognized them, and during the week was a letter entitling a check for $1,000, representing the amount of a loan, with accrued interest, which Mr. Grant paid to his Western friend many years ago. The central had long thought the letter was dead, or that the debt came as an entire surprise.

A dispatch to the bulletins sent out by telegraph, giving Grant's condition on the morning of the 15th inst., showed no change for the better. During the preceding twenty-four hours he had been confined to his sick-bed by the same patient. It took his meals in bed regularly, and frequently walked about the room. The doctors stand in private that the cancer was swelling and that its progress was more rapid than at any previous time at any moment.

There has been an extraordinary improvement in Grant's condition during the past few days, and the physicians say that they are now thinking of events to happen a month hence, and they hope positively that the morning of the 16th inst. The general was accompanied with a severe pain, and it was also about the 11th inst. reasoning that he felt quite well that he worked for several mornings on his book as was his custom. Yesterday, however, he was not so well indeed. Yesterday was a very severe day. The general was in the advanced room, the medical attendants were present, and the physicians were busy. The doctors were not in the room, but were in the adjoining room, ready to be summoned at any moment. The doctors were not in the room, but were in the adjoining room, ready to be summoned at any moment.

BUSINESS.

Proceedings of the Citizens' Meetings.

Pursuant to call as published in the JOURNAL, a meeting was held at the Village hall last Saturday evening, attended by nearly 200 of our business men and mechanics.

The house was called to order by A. D. Cruickshank, who stated briefly the object of the meeting. John Nicholls was made chairman, and Chas. J. Strang secretary.

To open the discussion, R. W. Kane called for remarks from those of our citizens who have been longest in the work of improvement, and desired us pecially to hear from J. Milo Eaton, who has been prominently connected with nearly every important work in the history of the village.

Mr. Eaton dwelt briefly on past efforts, and gave his ideas of the formation of an association to keep the work moving. As to the first and special work to be done (the building of a grist mill) he referred to conversations with Mr. Hankey of Petoskey, who had offered to build a mill here, if a large bonus was given him.

Geo. W. Crouter had talked with Mr. Hankey. The latter had bought 14,000 bushels of wheat the past year, two thirds of which was grown on land near Charlevoix, some of it passing through Charlevoix, right by our very doors,—and nearly every team carried back the price of the load in merchandise which would have been taken from Charlevoix merchants if the wheat could have been sold here. Mr. Crouter also referred to the consultation and by laws of Traverse City Business Men's Association, as published in the Michigan Tradesman, and asked that they be read by the secretary, which was done. Later discussion made it clear by that this was not the kind of an association now wanted, but might follow later on.

Mr. Nicholls referred briefly to the many loads of wheat drawn to Petoskey, and also to the work of Mr. Ingalls who had built a mill there. He thought Charlevoix ought to do as much here as Mr. Ingalls had there alone.

Mr. Cruickshank thought the people should begin now to move in some direction. Our resources lie around us undeveloped. Good men, skilful mechanics, lie idle a large part of the year, because the business of the town is not such as to keep them employed all the time, especially during the winter. Every thousand dollars of outside capital brought here enriches the town as much besides helping to give employment to every hand through which it passes. The same amount from our own pockets does not increase the wealth but simply changes its usual channel. We want an association to induce men to come here, and then see that they are properly met and shown our advantages when they do come. It is a fact that many times men have come here, not only willing to invest their small capital, and go to work, but anxious to do so, and they were not only not encouraged to stay, but were actually discouraged, and advised not to stay. To support this assertion several well known cases of recent occurrence were mentioned. It is not difficult to get men with capital to come here. They are charmed with our location as soon as they arrive, and can be induced to remain and invest if met with anything but a disposition to be exclusive and progressive. We do not now need an association like that in Traverse City, but we do need a committee to properly advertise the town, so that all who think of it will know what we have to offer.

Mr. L. Reid added his expression of the farmers of the vicinity of Charlevoix. He said if the farmers would be once aroused they would recognize their position in every matter, and decided. Mr. Reid then left the meeting, and not trying to control, simply because he is neither business or best fortunate. He spoke then, a few minutes. Those interested and widely circulated news here for those who are not. We must not grow more desirable. We must not grow more desirable. We must not grow more desirable

A FROLIC ON THE FLOOR.

BY WILLIAM HAUGHTON.

What's the matter with you, neighbor?
Is there any reason why
That your cheek is growing sallow
And there's jaundice in your eye?
Why, you look as if you fancied
All on earth you'd lose;
If you did not set me laughing
You would put me in the blues.
Have you ever tried what science
There is in the maple sweet?
No? Then you should begin it;
It may help you at your need.
Just a better plan I'll mention,
Since I've thought the matter o'er—
Have you ever tried a frolic
With the youngsters on the floor?

Tut, man! it is no wonder
That you're clumsy, grim, and gray;
That the horrid life is eating
All your heart and soul away;
That the merry god of laughter
In your bosom never rung.
For you've missed the only medicine
That can make an old heart young.
Oh, the pranks that are the dancing!
Oh, the smiling on the child!
Oh, the conjuring of the shouting
Of a happy-hearted child!
There's a magic power in it
Which you never heard before.
Try it, neighbor, for a minute—
Try a frolic on the floor.

Why, good man, the very baby
In the cradle there will crow
When he sees us, topsy-turvy,
Better skilled, be sure, than we.
And a young baby in the cradle
Will see jolly about as long
'Tis a pastime for the darlings,
And 'tis medicine, man, for me.
Oh, the bounding and the jumping!
Oh, the laughter mixing with
Oh, the tooting and the shouting
Of a merry-hearted child!
Now, good brother, don't decay it,
Will it not save fee-doctor?
Then go home, good man, and try it—
Try a frolic on the floor.

MATTIE VAN WYCK'S STORY.

BY BETTIE A. POTTER.

The fire burned low in the little home of the Van Wycks; nothing was heard but the ticking of the clock and the purring of the old gray cat. The night was frosty without, the tall pine trees cast their long shadows across the snow; everything seemed tranquil to Mattie Van Wyck as she looked out of the window, then going back to the stove, stirred the sea soup fire.

The Van Wycks were very well-to-do a few years back, Mr. Van Wyck having had quite a property left him; but being an easy-going man and not having the ability to make money, his property gradually slipped through his hands, leaving only a log house and a few acres of land, which, with her own industry, she could, would send her to school again. Mattie took her books and trudged to school with a heavy heart. She had planned so many little surprises with the money she would get, that to fail with her story was a bitter disappointment; but she studied hard and had her lessons. One day she noticed an unusual excitement among some of her schoolmates, and overheard one little girl saying to another "that Gracie Thornton was going to give a birthday party the next evening." Mattie thought no more about it, till on her way home a bright thought struck her; she walked more briskly and rushed into the house, exclaiming, "Oh, mother! Gracie Thornton is going to give a party to-morrow evening, and if I could only go." Her mother looked at her in amazement, and said: "Why, Mattie, I don't believe you want to go. Gracie Thornton belongs to a certain little 'set' who are wealthy and dress nicely like herself." "But I don't mean to go that way. I would like to go and help them some way, help buy refreshments, something like that. Mother, I want to see their elegant home, and then I can put it in my story, to-night on it up. Don't you think you can help me?" pleaded Mattie.

Col. Thornton was a wealthy banker then, had a fine residence and grounds. Mrs. Van Wyck had taken some sewing to do for them, and this is how Mattie thought perhaps, her mother might intercede for her.

The next morning after she had gone to school her mother went over to ask Mrs. Thornton what Mattie could do, telling her that she greatly desired to help in some way. Mrs. Thornton was a kind, motherly woman, loved by all who knew her. She smiled, and told her to send the child over; all means; there might be something she could do, and she could enjoy the music. Mrs. Van Wyck thanked her, and went home feeling too grateful to speak almost, knowing how pleased Mattie would be.

Mattie's wardrobe was very limited. Her mother got out her best dress, a black cashmere that she had worn two winters, mended it in one or two places, then washed and ironed a little ruffle and apron, and waited to tell her the good news. Mattie clapped her hands for joy when her mother told her, and was so excited she could scarcely eat her dinner.

Evening came at last. Mattie put on her black dress and muslin apron; her mother looked through all her drawers, and found a piece of carried ribbon, which she tied around her neck, and then brushed her hair, dainty work-baskets lined with crimson silk, and some with blue silk, each with a thimble, pair of scissors, and all the equipments for an it-dozen little girl; and there were sleds and hobby-horses for the boys, and Johnnie had spied in the next window a pair of boots with red tops that he thought would just fit him. Amy had seen some buttons like Kitty Myers', that she coveted; and Madge saw a story-book in the book-store window, with a picture of a happy family on the outside, sitting around a table reading by lamplight. It reminded her of their evenings at home, and she thought it would be a nice book to have.

Mattie's story was completed at last, and one morning, when she was going on an errand for her mother, she tucked it in her pocket, and, stopping on her way, entered the Pioneer office. There were several gentlemen in, discussing the topics of the day. The editor came forward and asked her what she would like. She asked him if he wished to buy a story. He began to murmur something about no "oversupply," when her slender figure and wan face attracted his attention. He took the story, telling her he had not time to read it then, but if she would leave her name he would look it over. She gave her address and left, performed her errand and went home.

Mattie and her mother were very busy, even the younger ones assumed little responsibilities, and all were as busy as bees.

Day after day passed till there were only two before Christmas. Mattie had been to the office time and time again, but no word from her story. She had almost given it up, when, one evening about dusk, as she was taking some sewing home to a lady on Summit avenue, she thought she would try once more. There was no need to give her name, for as soon as her paper was appeared, a large envelope was handed her, and Mattie knew she had received her money. The stores were beginning to be lighted and people were hurrying to and fro with suspicious-looking bundles; the air of mystery prevailed. No one was more mysterious than Mattie as she made her way through the bustling crowd. She went straight to her room, lighted her candle, and opened her letter; when, what should fall but a five-dollar bill! Her happiness was unbounded; her plans could all be carried out.

And what a merry Christmas they had! Mattie bought her mother a nice warm shawl, and some with blue silk, each with a thimble, pair of scissors, and all the equipments for an it-dozen little girl; and there were sleds and hobby-horses for the boys, and Johnnie had spied in the next window a pair of boots with red tops that he thought would just fit him. And what a merry Christmas they had! Mattie bought her mother a nice warm shawl, and some other presents.

When dinner time came, their mother said she had a surprise for them. They were all down to the table. She went into the kitchen and brought in a fine roasted turkey; and they peeped under a snowy napkin, and there was a large frosted cake, with frosted raisins on top. They were a happy family that day, and no one in the whole town was as radiant as Mattie Van Wyck; for she had found out that "Where there's a will there's a way."—Chicago Ledger.

Wants His Church Subscription Back.

At a recent meeting of the Universalist society in Lowell, Mass., a big gun of the church made so singular a request that the newspapers shrink from publishing it. He said that since that he had become poor, and he asked the society to refund to him the sum of $2,000 which he had given toward the erection and maintenance of the church building some twenty years ago. He did not get the money, and it will be strange if he does. Though the petitioner's name is not given, he is so well known that everybody knows who has a file of blue books can hunt him down. He is said to have held large federal offices almost continuously for twenty years or more. For years he was Minister to one of the European courts at a salary of $7,500 a year. Then he was Minister to a South American republic at a salary of $10,000 a year. If this is not a warning against the folly of indulging in the habit of asking against charitable living, surely, for if the $2,000 had not been given, it would undoubtedly have been squandered as the donor's other income was.—Exchange.

A Mixed Compliment.

John Littlefield, who is one of the businessmen men in Galveston, engaged himself to a young lady who was very far from being handsome. Her nose was very large, but very symmetrical in fact, she was positively homely. The young husband met Bill Nicholson on the street, and asked him:

"How do you find her looks?"

"I think you have done very well. She has one great advantage over you."

"What is that?"

"She disguised much better than it is possible for you to disguise yours."

Littlefield has been thinking it over, and is almost satisfied in his own mind that there is something he doesn't like in the compliment to his fine voice.—Texas Siftings.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

THE Legislature reassembled, after nearly a week's recess, on Wednesday, the time which both houses spent the day in committee of the whole not enough members being present to take up the third reading of bills. The Senate passed the House bill to permit the consolidation of institutions of learning, especially deaf and dumb, and of a union of two Detroit medical colleges. The bill to make the possession of game or fish during the close season prima facie evidence of the illegal capture of the same was killed; also the bill to provide a Deputy Attorney-General. In the House the Governor nominated his approval of acts amending the McKeon charter; amending the Bay City charter; organizing Tenth Township, and providing for public schools of Dundee, Bay County; in organizing the East Saginaw Board of Education.

IN the Senate the following bills were passed on their third reading: Incorporating the Grand Royal Templars; authorizing Jackson County Supervisors and Agricultural Society to sell grounds; amending section 5, Howell, relative to taking dogs from the pound in March; [illegible]. In the House the following bills were passed: Amending the office of Swamp Land Land Commissioner; authorizing the Kent Agricultural Society to dispose of certain property; to incorporate Detroit Bremen; to secure the payment of the Capitol Industrial Home at Adrian; amending the charter of Grand Rapids; [illegible]. Prescribing the manner in which the Attorney-General with statements of the [illegible] of a reporter shall file in the Supreme Court; amending section 5, Howell, relative to organization of school districts; defining the qualifications of voters; to prevent railroad acts in notices of sale; the bill punishing by confinement, subject to [illegible] of the Governor, cutters on children, was amended by making the crime punishable by a fine only for them, and this as amended and the question indefinitely postponed.

THE Senate struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill providing for the sale of schools on Saturday in districts where any of the pupils are Israelites, and passed the bill. The House bill to repeal the law to require the [illegible] of copies of the annual report to be [illegible] was lost on its final passage, receiving only 33 yeas.

Japanese Animals.

Some of the animals in Japan are quite different from the same species which are seen in America. The Japanese dog is a small, ugly, short-legged kind of tails, or else none at all. Being deprived of this usual plaything, they are very sensitive upon the subject. An American once took one of these tailless cats to San Francisco as a curiosity, and it utterly relieved companionship with the long-tailed cats of that country, the latter finding a cat whose tail had been cut off by accident, the two became friendly at once. Japanese monkeys are almost destitute of noses, having the nostrils set directly in the head. The smaller the nose, the more valuable the breed. The goldfish of that country have remarkably wide and beautiful tails, which look like fans. It Don't Pay.

"There is nothing more encouraging than the growing conviction on the part of the great mass of employers that they can have nothing to do with men who drink intoxicating liquors even in moderation. They don't look at it in many cases from a moral point of view, but simply as a matter of business. They know that those employed in certain occupations must above all things be reliable, with all their wits about them, and their nerves like steel. Drinking even moderately is incompatible with this. One extra glass has often made a man reckless who in the ordinary sense was perfectly sober. Hence all the great railway corporations are getting to insist upon their employes being not only sober men, but men who do not meddle at all with intoxicating liquors. A man drinking even the smallest quantity of liquor when on duty, would, if found out, be instantly dismissed on almost every railway on the continent. Railways can't afford to have men whose indulgence in liquor may cause the loss of life and hundreds of thousands of dollars. It don't pay."

Temperance Items.

I dont propose to instruct the physicians or contribute of my ignorance to any body, but, a good worker for temperance assures me that I can say with truth, that tobacco is excellent for a poultice to relieve intense pain. She has tried it, and speaks whereof she has felt, and now believes that the only use it is fit for has been discovered.—[Union Signal.

The evils of intemperance are forcing themselves on the attention of the British press. The London Times admits their magnitude, but can offer no remedy beyond "very stringent protection against bad and adulterated liquors." If the plague that once devastated London again visits that metropolis, the Times would favor prohibition. It would keep out the plague, if London had to be garrisoned. Some day society will see the wisdom of keeping out moral plagues.

Upon the vigilance of railroad employes the lives of many besides themselves frequently depend. And it is a wise precaution that forbids to them even the moderate use of stimulants, since he who drinks a little occasionally will drink too much occasionally. The great through line west from Chicago, on which the penalty of dismissal follows the slightest indulgence in alcohol even upon a single occasion, will sooner or later be fully repaid for its vigilance through the added incentive it in danger thus secured to its property and passengers.—S. S. Times.

An exchange truthfully remarks that two drinks of whiskey means a pound and a half of beef steak; two beers, a breakfast of mutton chops; one cocktail, an egg plant or head of cauliflower. "What will you take, Tom?" stands for a nice oyster stew or a warm lunch; or, perhaps, a nightmare on the night's repose. "Have a nip" would be the time, mark it, the ruin, misery in the house, results in the morning, not to speak of the headache, dizziness, nausea, retching, vomiting, etc., in the future, what is the baby, in comparison to the drink, and spirit in the morning time?—Ex.

The power to resist the will is proof that temperance men were wrong in the old argument in defending the moderate drinker. How unjust to condemn the man who could control his appetite for liquor! They compelled a harmless concession. The man who could control his appetite for liquor could control his appetite for tobacco, or for anything else, and need not be condemned for the use of either. Gen. Grant's Obstinate Battle with Death

New York dispatches of the morning of Saturday, April 18, report that Gen. Grant is progressing. Gen. Grant's case. The illustrious patient passed Friday in a quiet manner, at times pacing his room, and suffered no pain in swallowing his food. He talked freely with members of the family. In contradiction of the statements sent out that the General's malady was not cancerous, but only an aggravated sore throat, the doctors want the public to understand that "he is suffering from epithelial cancer of the antrum Burns, and therefore cannot to the slightest doubt of this. Additional consultations that have been made with the progress and symptoms of the disease have been practically in the line marked out by the highest medical science for its development. Not a symptom or sore, who has been confronted with the case has differed from his colleagues in the essentials in his examination.

The bulletins telegraphed from New York on the morning of April 20 in regard to Gen. Grant's condition reported the patient as still on the mend. He had passed two good days and nights resting quietly, sleeping soundly, and taking his nourishment at regular intervals. In the morning he dressed himself and walked about the house during the day. He could not be tempted at the window and would not be tempted. People who were on the street, and about the house, were requested to avoid obstructing the sick man's line of general's condition, the physicians persisted in their claim that the disease would terminate fatally, though death might be delayed for an indefinite period.

Gen. Grant enjoyed another night's unbroken rest, and the morning of April 21 found the surgeons more impressed that the physicians gave their consent to his taking an airing in the Central Park. Shortly after noon the family carriage was driven to the door. Gen. Grant heard the rumble of wheels, and as the driver reined up the team the sick man pulled aside the curtains a moment to assure himself that Buffalo Bill, mounted and bareheaded, the rear. Dr. Sheldon, the confidential nurse, with a fur robe upon his arm, emerged from the house and assisted the invalid. A moment later his friend appeared. He wore a high hat; about his neck was a silk scarf, and about the lower part his figure was a heavy beaver overcoat. The General carried a light cane, and, unaided, walked down the steps with a firm tread. As he crossed the pavement to the lowered platform a hundred hats were lifted in salute by those who had assembled on the walk across the street. As the general was stepping into the carriage he glanced up to the colored coachman and bade him good-morning. Harrison, as he moved to his place with the driver, remarked that there hadn't been such a day in the general's life since he was wounded in Mexico." The sufferer refused to accept riding Sunday, the 19th, giving as an excuse that at the time there were many people praying for him, and it would hardly be right that he should appear in public.

Gen. Grant slept uninterruptedly through the night of April 21, and was reported as apparently gaining in strength. Dr. Douglas, swelling at the base of his tongue still existed. He was driven through Central Park during the day. A New York telegram says: There are still rumors in certain circles that Gen. Grant's disease has been misrepresented. These rumors are increasing, and this morning the New said editorially that the impression was created by a card which has now disappeared; that he has not had cancer; that his doctors now admit it, and that Drs. Douglas and Sands have got a good deal of free advertising and are sharp fellows.

A continued improvement in Gen. Grant's condition was noted in the New York dispatches of April 23. His three physicians held a consultation and examined his throat, which they found to be much better than when last seen. The General drove out in his carriage, and later walked a block or two, returning not in the least fatigued. A gentleman just arrived from England, presented the General with a cane, upon which Prempr Disraeli had written his sympathies and good wishes for him. A Chattanooga dispatch reports that a movement is on foot in that city to tender Gen. Grant the free use during his convalescence of a private hotel on Lookout Mountain, in sight of the battle-fields of Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Lookout Mountain, and Chattanooga.

POLYGAMY'S DEATH-BLOW.

The Supreme Court Renders a Decision in the Case of Rudger Clawson.

In a Carefully Prepared Opinion the Ruling Is Against the Plaintiff on Both Points Raised.

[Washington dispatch.]

A decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court in the polygamy case of Rudger Clawson against the United States, brought here by writ of error from the Supreme Court of Utah. Clawson, plaintiff in error, was indicted for polygamy at the April term of 1884 of the District Court of Utah, and after trial found guilty and sentenced to a fine of $800 and four years' imprisonment. He appealed to the Supreme Court of the Territory, and that tribunal having affirmed the judgment of the District Court, he brought his case here for review, upon the ground that the grand and petit juries by which he was indicted and tried were illegally constituted. The alleged illegality in the impanneling of the grand jury consisted in the exclusion upon challenge of persons who believed a man had a right to have more than one living and undivorced wife at the same time, and in the case of the petit jury in the drawing of the jurors from an "open venire," after the whole panel had been exhausted. Besides this, Mr. Morgan's papers were signed by Senators Butler and Hampton, of South Carolina, and Gorman, of Maryland, Hon. H. T. Merrick, and other prominent Democrats. Senator Butler said that he had always known Morgan as a Democrat, and was greatly surprised to find that he had written in favor of Blaine."

Mr. Justice Blatchford, decides against the plaintiff in error upon both points raised. Section 5 of the Edmunds act provides:

"That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation under any statute of the United States, it shall be sufficient cause of challenge to any person drawn or summoned as juryman or talesman, that he believes that a man has more than one living and undivorced wife at the same time.

The court holds that the proceedings to impanel the grand jury which finds indictment for one of the offenses named under the statute of the United States against a person not before held to answer any part of the prosecution, and that the indictment is good, although persons drawn and summoned as Grand Jurors were excluded by the court from serving on the Grand Jury, and being challenged by the United States for cause mentioned in the act, the challenges having been found true.

With respect to alleged illegality in the case of the petit jury the court holds that the jurors were drawn under section 820 of the act of June 23, 1874, relating to courts and judicial officers in the Territory of Utah, the names in the jury-box of 200 jurors provided for by that section are exhausted, the jury being only partly impaneled, the District Court may issue a venire to the United States Marshal for the Territory to summon jurors from the body of the Judicial District, and the jury may be completed from persons summoned. It is held that the record shows no error, and the judgment of the court below is accordingly affirmed.

LANSING, April 20.

When the Senate was called to order last Monday morning it was found that less than a quorum of Senators were present, so an informal recess was taken until afternoon, when, as a result of the extended recess, the Judiciary Committee reported over forty bills in one batch. That was by far the greatest amount of bills reported by either committee at one time this session. As in Congress, so in the Senate, Senator Hubbell is a worker, and his committee turns off work rapidly and well. The House did a light business work with little more than a quorum, and then both houses adjourned, and most of the members left their wives or lady friends, took a special train over the Michigan Central going beyond $25,000 as the wealth of the State increases. The Senate also passed the general appropriation bill for the University, giving it $107,500, of which $80,000 shall be collected in 1885 and $17,500 in 1886. The Senate concurred in the 14th the bills appropriating $70,200 for the current expenses of the State Normal School for 1885 and 1886, and $120,425 for current expenses, buildings, etc., for the Institution for educating the deaf and dumb at Flint.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Senate has yet to push its appropriation bills ahead of every other class of legislation, which may possibly mean preparation for an early adjournment, but it isn't possible that final adjournment can be reached earlier than it was in 1883.

The bill to reduce the test on illuminating oil from 110 to 150 degrees, passed the Senate on the 16th, to the surprise of everybody, by a vote of yeas 19, nays 6.

The joint resolution so to amend the Constitution as to abolish the Board of Auditors passed the House and the Senate on the 16th. This is the board whose doings have been so generally and so severely criticised by the Detroit papers during the past year or two.

When the bill to increase the salaries of the Supreme Court Judges to $5,000 per year came up, an amendment was offered and discussed for half a day, to provide that no law should be declared unconstitutional except as so declared by at least five of the Judges. The original bill as it now stands was defeated by one vote.

The Secretary has on hand a verbal report of his chemical experiments with poisonous cheese. He had certainly secured in a crystalline form a small quantity of the poison from poisonous cheese which would produce in man symptoms similar to those produced by cheese. There might be other poisons in poisonous cheese. He had not fully satisfied himself that he had obtained. It gave reactions like those of autosuine. It was probable, he thought, that the poisonous principle was due to the sickness caused by cheese. There are different kinds of bacteria and the absence of the odor of rancid butter would not prove the absence of butyric acid.

The subject of sanitary surveys of premises in cities and villages was thoroughly discussed. It was decided that no law or blanks need should be uniform, but that each city or village should provide its own blanks. The committee was directed to make a sample blank to be recommended for use, and he sent with a report on resolution, which was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Michigan State Board of Health earnestly recommends to the Boards of Health of the cities and villages in Michigan that they make a sanitary survey of the territory under their jurisdiction, on blanks of which a sample is sent herewith, and that the expense incurred in such sanitary surveys may prove to be necessary to place the cities and villages in a good sanitary condition.

Upon ballot for President of the board for the ensuing term of two years, Dr. John Avery, of Greenville, was re-elected.

It was decided to demand from health officers of cities and villages reports of sickness under their observation.

Under the law requiring the approval by the Board of text books on physiology and hygiene, and the effects of alcohol, etc., on those provided, that a large number of the books on the list of the State Normal School for 1885 and 1886, and $120,425 for the Institution for educating the deaf and dumb at Flint.

The subject of sanitary surveys of premises in cities and villages was thoroughly discussed. It was decided that no law or blanks need should be uniform, but that each city or village should provide its own blanks. The committee was directed to make a sample blank to be recommended for use, and he sent with a report on resolution, which was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Michigan State Board of Health earnestly recommends to the Boards of Health of the cities and villages in Michigan that they make a sanitary survey of the territory under their jurisdiction, on blanks of which a sample is sent herewith, and that the expense incurred in such sanitary surveys may prove to be necessary to place the cities and villages in a good sanitary condition.

Upon ballot for President of the board for the ensuing term of two years, Dr. John Avery, of Greenville, was re-elected.

It was decided to demand from health officers of cities and villages reports of sickness under their observation.

Under the law requiring the approval by the Board of text books on physiology and hygiene, and the effects of alcohol, etc., on those provided, that a large number of the books on the list of the State Normal School for 1885 and 1886, and $120,425 for the current expenses, buildings, etc.,

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Grand Closing Entertainment at the Parlors of the Bridge Street House.

Banquet and Program.

On Tuesday evening, April 14th, the Society adjourned from the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Allen, for two weeks, to meet at the pleasant parlors and dining room of the Bridge Street house, and participate in the closing banquet and program of the season.

At 6:30 p. m. the commodious dining room was found occupied by the members and friends of the society, all taking a lively interest in the elegantly prepared festivities as arranged by the ladies of the society. After all had supplied themselves with cake, coffee, rolls, sandwiches and toothpicks, they were seated in the parlors to listen to the well prepared and interesting program.

Miss Aggie Miller and A. D. Bradbeer opened the exercises with a beautiful duet. The select reading by H. Lee Iddings was very good indeed. Vocal duet by F. A. Smith and A. T. Washburn.

The paper of the evening prepared and read by Mrs. Harsha deserves more praise than the writer can find words to express. It was indeed ex cellent and worthy of publication in any first class newspaper or magazine, and was so considered by all present.

Quartette; Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Hines, Messrs. Bradbeer and Carlstein, sung very nicely and was appreciated by all.

After an intermission of ten minutes W. A. Smith and Mrs. Hines entertained the society with a very nice vocal duet.

Miss Cochran's select reading was well worthy of praise.

The guitar duet by Miss Loveday and A. T. Washburn was a rare treat to all present, and not only well executed but very pretty.

Major Green's remarks, as president of the society, in his usual pleasing manner made a good part of the program, declaring the past session the most prosperous and interesting of any previous year.

The exercises were closed by an instrumental solo by Miss Aggie Miller, and she did nicely. The society were then by motion adjourned to meet in October next; place will be noticed in due time.

FRED. A. SMITH, Secretary.

Mrs. F. G. Hines soprano, Mrs. E. M. Clark alto, Mr. A. D. Bradbeer tenor, and Dr. J. A. Carlstein bass, gave a selection at the Historical Tuesday evening, which has received much favorable mention. It had been previously given at one of the society's meetings, and was liked so well that its repetition was requested.

Mrs. H. S. Harsha seems to have a rare faculty of making innocent humorous hits on people with her pen. The paper read at the historical is an instance. Her literary work bears evidence of native wit reinforced with careful training, which enables her to catch passing humor and clothe it in the best language.

The ladies of the Society under whose general supervision the very complete banquet was planned and served deserve much praise from all who were favored with seats at the loaded tables.

The executive committee of the society have provided excellent entertainments all winter.

Charlevoix Improvement Association.

At the village hall last Saturday evening, this association completed its organization and elected officers as follows:

President—Byron See.

First Vice President—W. A Smith.

Second Vice President—Robert Miller.

Recording Secretary—C. J. Strang.

Financial Secretary—B. Stafford.

Treasurer—Albert E. Mason.

President See appointed the following standing committees:

Executive Committee—J. M Eaton, A. D. Crandelbac[illegible] H. Hurd.

Corresponding Committee—H. Lee Iddings, W. A. Brown, and C. Y. Cook.

Reception Committee—Fred W. Mayne, L. D. Bartholomew, M. J. Stockman, B. Cooper, Geo. W. Cronter, B. W. Miller, S. M. See, W. C. Newman, E. M. Clark, H. Berdan.

The constitution and bylaws define the objects and methods of government of the association, in about the same manner as societies generally. The corresponding committee are to advertise the business advantages of the village, and answer all correspondence in relation thereto; and the reception committee are to meet those coming here and endeavor to induce the investment of capital. Any person interested in the welfare of the town may become a member by signing the constitution and bylaws, and paying one dollar a year membership fee.

The committees are now at work, and letters of inquiry are already being received.

The next regular meeting will be held at the village hall Monday evening, May 11th.

Newspapers of To-Day.

People generally, and even those who may be termed steady readers and close observers, have but a faint conception of the magnitude and influence the press of this country has attained. From a careful examination of the advance pages of the 1885 edition of the American Newspaper Directory, issued May 1st, by Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, it appears that there are 14,147 newspapers and periodicals published in the United States and Canada; of these the United States has 12,973, an average of one paper for every 3,867 persons. In 1884 the total number of newspapers was less by 823 than at present, and while the gain this year is not so marked as in some previous years, it is still considerable. Kansas shows the greatest increase, the number being 78, while Illinois follows with a gain of 77. It is curious to notice that New York, the scene of so much political activity during the last campaign, should have only about one third as many new papers as the State of Pennsylvania. As an index to the comparative growth and prosperity of different sections of the country, especially the Territories, the number of new papers forms an interesting study, and may well occupy the attention of the curious.

New York World: Well, the Democrats are in power and have already scattered these falsehoods to the winds. Honest people who were really misled and deceived by the persistency of these republican charges have had an opportunity to see that the democratic administration means civil service reform, business revival, increasing employment of labor, economy and honesty in expenditures, greater regard for the rights of the people and an elevation of the standard of public honor. They find democrats fitter to rule than republicans, and the southern citizens as true and loyal to the union and the constitution as northern citizens. The elections mean that honest, conscientious men who wronged the democracy by crediting the republican slanders are now anxious to do reparation and to per form a public duty by putting democrats into power wherever deserving candidates of that party ask their suffrages.

The Tradesman is out with a new dress of type. It has all along been one of the cleanest, most business-like papers in the state, and indications now are that it means to stay at the front.

We have already come down to the five-cent basis. The time will come when we will be inevitably compelled to descend to one to rest peace of the cold and relentless East. The chivalrous sentiment which dictates the settlement of values varying on either side of the "California clit" will also have to be discarded.—The Inglenook, San Francisco.

A woman, whose son had been ruined by dissipation, was fined $8 in Hamilton, Ont., the other day, with the alternative of ten days in jail, because she knelt before a saloon and asked God to curse the liquor traffic.

Jigging for Frost Fish.

Jigging for frost fish is now the sport here. At this season the fish crowd into the shallow water along the shores of the Thames. When the first ice makes the frost-fish jigger is out for business. He needs no bait, but, knowing the habits of the fish, relies wholly upon stratagem. He provides himself with two sticks two feet in length. Upon the end of one he ties a cluster of oak leaves, and at the end of the other he fastens a sharp hook, making a miniature gaff. He takes his bushed stick and puts it down in from eight inches to a foot and a half of water and begins to oscillate it patiently, and the frost fish come to it as pet dogs or cats come to meat. They swim slowly beneath it, rubbing against the leaves and expressing signs of gratefulness at finding such shelter, when the jig is deftly lowered alongside of them and they are jerked out of the water with a suddenness that must astonish even a fish. The fish do not seem to get frightened, but continue to swarm beneath the leaves and be hooked up as long as the jigger has patience to pull them. In this way bushels of ton cents are caught annually from the Thames.—Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin.

DANGER.

Do you know that you are liable to attacks of dyspepsia and all kinds of stomach derangement? Yes, worse still, to that result of kidney and liver disorder that is known as diabetes or possibly bright's disease. They are often fatal and that in a very short time. Loss of appetite, sour stomach, dimness of vision, dizziness, pains in side and back and many others are but the symptoms of disease. Be wise in time. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure is the sovereign remedy. Large bottles $1.00.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

COUGHS AND COLDS

Are the inevitable results of sudden changes in the weather. Immediate attention should be given them so that they may not become established and result in bronchitis, congestion, inflammation or even consumption. Hamilton's Cough Balsam soothes the irritated membrane, and assists in removing phlegm and mucus, that, by its adhesion to the membranes, causes violent coughing. Great relief is received by even those in the last stages of consumption. In croup and whooping cough it is unequaled. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATION

Has proved that nothing but a direct application can cure the many forms of piles, that so trouble all classes of mankind. In all forms of piles, immediate and careful attention is needed. By faithfully following the direction given with each box of Parmelee's Pile Suppositories a cure is certain. Warranted to give immediate relief. Price 50c per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

IN THE SPRING

Nature intends that the human body should be relieved of the heavy, stagnant humors which always accumulate during the winter months, and the very best medicine for accomplishing this object is Parmelee's Blood Purifier. It will cleanse and purify the system and drive out all humors and impurity safely and quickly. Price $1.00 for large bottles.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

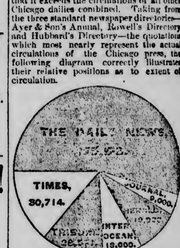
The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,878 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of a modern journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an Independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed, THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

The season is late this year. There is as yet only a little done in the coasting trade, including the lumber cargo, because the "straits" are still closed, and the present season of upper lake navigation bids fair to be the latest in opening within the last thirty-one years—since a record has been kept. The latest so far on record is 1881, when navigation at the straits opened May 4. The earliest was in 1878, on March 14. The general average is between April 22 and 30. Marine insurance runs from April till November, both months included.

"Double the circulation and twice the amount of reading matter of any other paper in the county," is a bold claim for the Sentinel to make. A larger circulation we admit,—perhaps a hundred or two,—but not double by a long ways. As to quantity of reading matter, a careful measurement will show their claim to lack nearly twenty feet in length of column,—equal to over ten columns of the Sentinel. The Journal will not attempt to compete in size with any paper at any time, but we do invite a critical comparison of quantity or quality of purely home news any week,—not of all that appears on the local page, but of strictly home news.

Mrs. Powers and the other stockholders of the Northern Manufacturing Co., at Boyne Falls, have executed a trust deed of all the property belonging to the corporation at that place to Lester J. Rindge, of this city, and Chas. Root, of Detroit, who will carry on the business to the best of their ability, realize on the assorts as fast as possible, and distribute the proceeds among the creditors pro rata. The property comprises a saw mill, planing mill and handle factory, stocks of logs, lumber and handles, and a stock of general merchandize. The raw material will be manufactured as fast as possible, and while the store will be re-enforced with such goods as find a ready sale, every effort will be made to close the whole matter out before a year has elapsed. The total liabilities are $6,500, distributed among creditors at Grand Rapids, Detroit, and Chicago. The aggregate assets nearly approach the liabilities in value, and may be closed out so as to leave a margin for the stockholders, although the latter possibility depends entirely upon the future improvement in business.—[Tradesman.

Mr. Charles Spaulding died of typhoid pneumonia, at the residence of his parents, in Elk Rapids, last Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, aged about 18 years. He was prostrated on the Monday morning previous, but rallied sufficient to give a sugar party to his friends which had been planned for Monday evening. From that time he failed steadily and rapidly until Sunday. He was a member of the band, and a regular attendant at the high school. The principal of the school was granted permission to decorate the grave, and with the assistance of the scholars literally lined it with flowers, and scattered them profusely over the casket after it was lowered into the stone-lined vault. He was a close student, and intended to enter the contest for a cadetship at West Point. Deceased was a nephew of Miss L. Spaulding, and a cousin of Miss Flora Nelson, of Charlevoix.

TRIXIE'S LETTERS.

BY JENNIE S. JUDSON.

[Letter No. 1.]

JUNE 13.

It is just one week to-day, Cecil dear, since you and I stood like two Niobes on the steps of dear old St. Agnes, bidding each other a sad farewell. A week, and yet the shadow of that parting has not left me.

Not one adventure connected with my journey have I to relate, although my romantic soul was constantly on the alert for anything that savored of sentiment.

Major Pierson met me at the depot with a carriage and horses, and as soon as I caught sight of his kind, fatherly face I recalled the many times I had seen it in my father's home in Dorset. His greeting was so cordial, and he bent upon me so kind and indulgent an expression, I felt sure at once that the tie between us would be nearer than the mere legal one of guardian and ward.

My first acquaintance with the family was made at the supper-table, whither I was conducted by Miss Pierson, the Major's maiden sister, and little Bess, the six-year-old pet of the household. I was presented in turn to Miss Ida Crane, the Major's niece, a beautiful girl, who makes her home here; Mr. Jack Pierson, the younger son, now at home for his college vacation; and Mr. Frank Pierson, the elder son, also at home, convalescing from a recent illness.

"So this is our new little sister, is it?" said Mr. Frank Pierson, as I was introduced last to him. "Miss Beatrix, I hope you may be happy in your new home."

"Little sister," indeed! My eyes flashed up a glance of repudiation at this patriarch, who evidently regarded me as just free from swaddling clothes. An amused glance in response proved that he understood.

Bessie, Jack, and I soon struck up a friendly alliance, and as I bade the family an early good-night I was thrilled with the happy thought that I would find congenial companionship in my new home.

"Miss Beatrix," cried a sweet little voice next morning, as I looked out from my window at the flower-yard below, "come down and see the diamonds on the flowers."

So, tying my hair loosely back, I ran down to join the little fairy below.

After a short but delightful survey of the flowers, Bessie conceived the brilliant idea of converting my muff-lined hat head into a miniature flower garden.

"You have beautiful hair, Miss Beatrix," she said, giving me a vigorous punch with a hollyhock as she spoke; "but I don't like your name; it twists my little tongue."

"Then don't say it, darling; call me Trixie instead."

"May Brower Jack call you Trixie, too?" was the next unexpected attack.

"Oh! yes, I suppose, if he adds on a mister," was my careless reply.

But Brower Frank may call you Trixie without so much as a mister, may'n't he?" looking earnestly down in my eyes.

I caught her in my arms with a kiss. "Oh, never mind about Brother Frank," I cried. "I am only his little sister; so it can make no difference what he calls me."

The lengthy meal of the breakfast bell so startled me at this juncture that I rose hurriedly to my feet.

"How late!" I cried, putting my hand to my head; "now I shall be late for breakfast, and my first morning, too."

While standing in this graceful attitude the rustling of a newspaper caused me to glance up, and there, looking at me from the arbor, I saw the handsome laughing face of Frank Pierson.

"All hail to Aurora," he cried; "fair goddess of the morning, accept, I pray, this additional tribute to your charms," handing me a spray of woodbine as he spoke.

"Oh! is that you, Brover Frank?" cried traitorous little Bess. "I had forgot you was there."

I felt prepared at this point to do or say anything absurd. For twice in the space of twenty-four hours had I been laughed at by this very superior young man, and in that quiet, self-contained sort of way that is particularly exasperating.

"Do you like our flower-garden, Miss Beaumont?" he asked, as we started toward the house.

"I can't say that I do," I answered shortly, "I am not especially fond of flowers."

"Beg pardon," he cried, "but I thought you were, judging from the pre-fusion with which you used them, in taking a laughing survey of my poor, silly bed."

This was too much, and before I knew I had answered with a flash of temper, "Indeed, sir, what you think is none of my business," and turned angrily away from him.

He made no reply, but as I hastened toward the house I heard him murmur with an irrepressible laugh, "Ophelia in the mad scene with an accent on the 'mad.' See, Cecil! I wonder if I looked like poor, crazed Ophelia.

Not once did I glance toward him during breakfast, and when, after we had all assembled there was to be a consultation as to the best means of passing the time, I accepted the invitation to go in the carriage with Miss Pierson and Bessie, instead of going myself in the library, for she was to be one of the gentlemen's party, making him count out French verbs at full time, and laughing at his mistakes.

For a week our little pleasure-boat sailed on thus tranquilly, when one fated morning it struck upon a reef, that nearly Moonlight Sonata. I ensconced myself in a deep window-seat to read. "Twas a languid summer morning, and the droning of the bees, and the bubble of a little brook lulled me into a state of blissful unconsciousness. How long this happy condition had lasted I have no idea, but when I finally unclosed my heavy eyes, 'twas to find my head softly cushioned on the sofa-pillow, and the curtains so drawn down as to screen me from the sunlight. Indolently musing my eyes I saw sitting not five feet from me, his head thrown back on the purple velvet of the chair, his eyes intent on a book, that very ubiquitous person, Mr. Frank Pierson. Do you think I rose gracefully, thanked him for services rendered, and made my exit from the room?

No, you are mistaken. Instead, I gave an angry little jump, confronting him like a young tigress. How ashamed I am now when I remember it! But think what a silly spectacle I had presented, seated asleep, and with my mouth wide open.

"I might have spared you the trouble of acting as my guard, Mr. Pierson," I said, irately, "had I known that in entering here I was intruding upon your domain."

"Pardon me," he answered, quietly. "I seem destined to offend. Let me explain. In passing through this room, I found you asleep in the window, and so carelessly posed that you might easily have fallen out. Common kindness alone demanded that I should protect you. If there is an intrusion it is on my part, and I leave you to the undisturbed enjoyment of this room," saying which he left.

I was all repentance in a moment. My impulse was to make amends on the spot, but it suddenly died; for, as he ascended the steps, I heard him sing, with direct allusion to my morning's garden coiffure, "Make me no gaudy chaplet."

Jack and Bess and I took a lovely row on the lake this afternoon. We returned so late that I only escaped a Miss Pierson's censure for my tardiness in the parlor (where an entertainment was being given in my honor) by appearing in a handsome costume, and looking gracefully as I could.

I did so enjoy my first evening "out," Cecil.

Once during its course, as I waited on the moonlit gallery for my partner to bring me an ice, I saw Frank Pierson standing near me. He looked pale and ill, and seemed quite oblivious of my presence.

Something in his melancholy attitude struck upon my conscience. And that unpleasant little monitor whispered, "You are a flirt, Miss Beaumont, and now is your opportunity to make it. Be brave and do your duty."

I didn't stop to parley, but with faltering footsteps approached the stern figure.

"I have come to make you an apology, Mr. Pierson," I said, speaking almost and checks flushing. "I have been childishly rude to you twice to-day; but I am sorry now, and hope you will not let it fester in my memory."

For a moment there was no reply, then, quick as a flash, he turned, and looked up, but only to meet an expression of countenance so strange, so inexplicable that I recoiled involuntarily before it. And when he interrogated, coldly and almost scornfully, "May I ask your motive, Miss Beaumont, for this course of action? Was it to obtain a balm for self-wounded pride, or through a sincere desire to atone?" my spirit rose in defiance, and I turned to leave, saying, with bitterness:

"I regret that the effort which this apology has cost me has been wasted on one who cannot discern a true motive from a false one."

"Stay, Miss Beaumont!" he cried, with an entire change of manner, "until I beg your pardon. I only asked that question that I might free myself from indemnified for anything you may have said, have I not?" with a little laugh. "Only forgive me and let us be friends." And he extended with so cordial and smiling an air that I could not resist, and we made a compact of friendship on the spot.

Two quarrels and a reconciliation in one day! I know the idea will amuse you.

I like my new home, Cecil, and all are kind to me. Think of me dear, as being as happy as I can be without you, and congratulate me for that lack of a long and early letter. Your loving friend,

BEATRIX BEAUMONT.

JULY 2.

If this letter seems a little blue, Cecil, dear, please attribute the fact to physical weakness. When I am strong again, I shall be your "old, light-hearted Trixie." I have been sick of late. Yes, really sick, for the first time in my healthy life; and since I know nothing short of the cure of the whole matter will satisfy you, I shall begin at the very beginning.

Don't smile, please, because this recital begins with the name of one, mention of whom filled most of my last letter. An explanation of matters cannot be made without it.

The reconciliat on spoken of in my last letter seemed so complete that I spoke forward to a happy life. "No rose is without a thorn," thought, as more than a week afterward I sat reading "Corinne" in the library. While during breakfast, and while, afterward I ascended the staircase to have a consultable chat with Bessie, subject, of course, Mr. Pierson. To say that I was no means myself in the library, for she was to see me the gentlemen absent on the 5 o'clock train.

I accepted cheerfully and was soon arrested in my depression by the sight of a splendid stag-hound, and two fine cows all grazing in the Banks. After playing all, on fa orites, among them and being sadly injured, was deserted from that hour.

"I am ashamed of Corinne," I said hotly, on the morning in question. "She confesses her love for Oswald openly, before he has uttered one syllable of his for her."

"Don't be too severe, Miss Beatrix," said Mr. Pierson, provokingly. "Perhaps she couldn't help it. Who knows but 'me lord' was just such a handsome, irresistible lady as ——exense me, modesty forbids that I proceed. Can you blame her if he was?"

I was silly enough to flush at this sauey insinuation; but just as a laughing retort rose to my lips, a servant announced that Mr. Keeldar waited me in the parlor, and I arose to leave.

Mr. Pierson's brow darkened at the announcement, and as I threw down my book, he remarked with sarcasm: "Why not let us adopt that sweet and gentle youth, Miss Beaumont. His visits have become daily now, and the weather is so warm, 'twould be a great economy of trouble for him."

"Nothing would suit me better," I answered gayly, as I stepped into the hall.

Mr. Keeldar is very wise and very pleasant, Cecil. He lives on the next plantation, and often comes to take me to ride.

All thought of the French lesson had escaped my mind the next morning, as arrayed in my riding habit I stumbled into the library to await my escort. Sitting near the window, I began to hum "Come O'er the Water, Charlie," forgetting how appropriate the words were to the occasion, when Mr. Pierson came into the room and gave me so significant a glance that my cheeks grew red as a peony at once.

"What a pity Charlie isn't o'er the water now," he said, mockingly, "to see and hear you. Do you know of what I am reminded as I see you thus?" and he read from the book in his hand this passage: "Corinne waited at her window for Oswald's coming. Her face was filled with eager expectancy, and his name was often upon her lips." "Is not the picture true?" with such sarcastic emphasis that I was stung to the quick.

I know just how unmaidenly you consider me, Mr. Pierson," I said, rising haughtily; "but you might have spared your finer perceptions this rude shock had you not stolen unobserved upon me here." Rather arrogant, was I not, Cecil?

He paled visibly beneath my scornful words, but only answered in a quiet tone, "I had no idea of intruding, or to cause me to forget that this was the hour we have usually devoted to French, but you seem quite conscious that I remembered when you did not."

Truly I had forgotten the French lesson quite, and stood dumb and confused while he put the French book on the shelf, saying, "There will be no further need for me to read Corinne at present, since I have found a stopping place for it. And when he interrogated, coldly and almost scornfully, "May I ask your motive, Miss Beaumont, for this course of action? Was it to obtain a balm for self-wounded pride, or through a sincere desire to atone?" my spirit rose in defiance, and I turned to leave, saying, with bitterness:

I have been heartsick and weary since that wretched night, and long for you, dear friend, far more than I can say. But "don't be sorrowful, darling;" I soon shall be well again, and then I shall be as now, your loving, but not your weak and tired friend, TRIXIE.

[Letter No. 3.]

AUG. 1.

But for a little floating langnor that hangs about me still, I am quite myself again, though the old light-heartedness has not come back even yet, Cecil, and in its place there lingers an ugly little pain that in vain I try to drive away.

Miss Pierson rides locks with undisturbed eyes at Mr. Frank Pierson and then across to me. Does she imagine that I, too, am prey to a secret grief?

My conjectures in regard to Mr. Pierson's constant depression met with an unexpected confirmation a few evenings since. Shall I tell you of it? I was sitting in my window in the darkness when Miss Ida's voice came up to me from the gravel walk below. "Poor Frank!" she said, "and that was why you came back looking so pale and worn? Forgive me, cousin, that I have gained your secret." And then, a little later, Mr. Pierson's deeper tones:

"Who is too ardtes to conceal her preference for him, and I feel more keenly than I can tell the power my rival yields."

"Your rival, Frank!" with an incredulous laugh; "how could such a man rival you?"

I did not catch the answer, but a moment later, as they came again beneath my window, I heard him quote with a mocking laugh:

"What care I how fair she be,
If she be not fair for me?"

"I do care, though," he added, with a sigh, "struggle against it as I may." And then their voices died away, and I was left with a pain at my heart as I had never known.

Long for something all the while. It must be you, Cecil, and as I have written a long letter but a few days ago, I am quite ashamed of the demand. Still, I am sure you will forgive me, for Mr. Pierson's conduct is of a character to excite one that I had little or no hope even giving him relief. But seeing the object most at his cure I have recommended the medicine above, and it seems to use it myself, for I have not had quotation and am in excellent health. Of those to whom I have recommended it I are heard of only one instance in which declared it was not gained. I consider amphores a wonderful medicine.

Napoleon's Judgment.

It was during the unsettled times that preceded the great French revolution of 1848 that one of Mr. Rogers' friends was in Paris. The Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, afterward Napoleon III.; Dr. Whately, the Protestant Archbishop of Dublin; and William Pitt Lennox, the son of the Duke of Richmond, and myself. The day we have taken together turned a great deal upon French politics and probability, more or less imminent, of a revolutionary outbreak in France, in consequent upon the unwise opposition of Louis Philippe and his too obsequious Ministers.

In reply to a question I told the Prince that Beranger, who knew the temper and sympathized with the opinions of Elysée Cream Balm is the best remedy for catarrh I ever saw. I never took anything that relieved me so quickly, and I have not felt so well for a long time. I used the remedy with severe headaches two or three times a week, but since using the balm have only used it once, and that was on account of a severe cold. I am confident that with continued use of Elysée Cream Balm all who are afflicted with catarrh can be cured. I send this voluntarily, that those afflicted may be benefited. Yours respectfully, BURRELL H. DAVIS.

Coughs, Colds, Croup, Consumption, and Remedy.

Of all the multitude of fearful ills that prey upon and destroy the human race, consumption stands out with distinctive prominence as the most alarming. A cold at first, then a neglected cough leads to the development of this scourge of mankind. One remedy that has survived the test of time is Allen's Lung Balsam, compounded from the purest ingredients and free from all combinations of opium. For coughs, colds, croup, bronchitis, and all other affections of the throat and lungs it stands unrivaled. It approaches so nearly a specific that with the common sense directions around each bottle strictly complied with, nine cases in ten, of consumptive cases are permanently cured by this invaluable remedy. The safety of every family would be consulted by keeping a bottle of Allen's Lung Balsam in the house and have it ready for use on a cough, colds, and croup make their unwelcome intrusion.

Marvelous Restorations.

The cures which are now being made by Drs. Dyspepsia is the prevailing healthy complaint of the present day. Nearly all are very careful of what they eat, but all use many kinds of food, which, improperly prepared, soon are lumped and become a solid mass of indigestible matter. Dyspepsia is by no means confined to those of sedentary habits, for the active, laboring man suffers from the Tortly Complaint—Indigestion, Biliousness, and Dullness, as promptly as the sedentary. Pain in the Shoulders, Cough, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Region of the Kidneys and a thousand and one other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. Hop Bitters is the great antidote to this fearful complaint; it will tone the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels, and in this way cure all diseases arising from a disordered stomach or bowels. Don't suffer another day with this terrible complaint, but use Hop Bitters at once, and realize that health is once more restored. Don't wait until you are entirely prostrated before using Hop Bitters. A few bottles may prevent a long spell of sickness. Don't drink whiskey, rum, or poisonous bitters, made to sell on account of their intoxicating properties, but use Hop Bitters, the great health restorer, and have your friends do the same.

RUSSIA'S CURT REPLY.

De Giers Refuses to Talk Further About the Penjdeh Incident—Duplicity of Turkey.

[Cable dispatch from London.]

The Russian reply to the communication sent to M. de Giers through Sir Edward Thornton yesterday, after the receipt of Sir Peter Lumsden's supplementary report on the battle of March 30, has just been received. M. de Giers replies curtly that Russia declines to enter upon any further discussion of the Penjdeh incident.

It is reported at St. Petersburg that the general staff are in favor of allowing Gen. Komaroff to act at his own discretion, and even M. de Giers to interfere.

A letter from Baku confirms the first account of the battle of Penjdeh, and states that the Afghan force consisted of 4,000 men. The writer, who had been with Sir Peter Lumsden, but who left him before the battle was fought, states that Russia throughout the winter had been trying to excite and irritate the Afghans, and that only Sir Peter Lumsden's influence prevented bloodshed long ago. Col. Alikhanoff advanced to Ak-Tapa at about the end of November, before the boundary commission had arrived, and a battle with the Afghans was narrowly avoided then. Baku has also been received that in the battle at Penjdeh the Afghan General was brought out in the fore front of the fighting and was twice wounded. It is reported that Col. Alikhanoff offered a reward of 100 krans (about $80) for the head of either of the British officers with the Afghan force.

A dispatch from Constantinople puts a new light on the diplomatic mission to England of Hassan Fehmi Pasha, the special Turkish Envoy, and Hobart Pasha, Admiral of the Turkish Empire. In order to avoid the censorship of press dispatches at Constantinople this message was sent by mail to Athens and transmitted thence by telegraph to London. It says that the sole mission of Fehmi Pasha, who has been here constantly since January last, was to fool the British Government into a belief that Turkey was disposed to be on friendly terms with England and to seek and follow her advice in all international complications. Hobart Pasha, whose former reputation as a gallant Admiral of the British navy made him an admirable tool for this purpose, was sent with Fehmi Pasha to strengthen the blind. Hobart Pasha, it is asserted, only left the delivery of certain presents to the Queen and Prince of Wales, accompanied by the customary assurances of distinguished consideration, etc., which may mean a great deal or nothing. All the fine work of diplomatic intrigue was to be done and has been done from first to last by Fehmi Pasha.

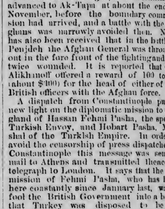
ABDURRAHMAN KHAN.

The Ameer of Afghanistan.

Ameer Abdurrahman Khan was born in 1830. He is the eldest son of Afzul Khan, and is thus a grandson of Dost Mohammed, who ruled Afghanistan till his death in 1863, and nephew to the late Sher Ali, who was deposed and expelled by the British invasion, of 1878, and who died soon afterward in exile. When Sher Ali was recognized by the English, Abdurrahman, who had married a daughter of the Turkish Ameer of Bokhara, took refuge in those countries north of Afghanistan beyond the Oxus, which had then not yet been subjected to Russian control. He subsequent, however, by the persecting spite of Sher Ali and Yakoob, who had seized his mother, wife, and sister, and detained them many years prisoner at Cauldar, and who compelled the Ameer of Bokhara to deny him an asylum in that state. Abdurrahman was fain to put himself under the protection of the Russians, then gradually advancing their conquests in Turkestan, and was received by Gen. Kaufmann, who procured him, in the name of Russia, a pension of 25,000 rubles a year, and afterward permitted him to reside at Samarcand. After innumerable intrigues and internal dissensions the throne was again vacated, and the present Ameer was proclaimed in 1880, and has been very substantially supported by the British Government of India, under Lord Ripon, receiving from it a regular subsidy of £120,000 a year, with large gifts of artillery rifles, and ammunition to improve his military force.

FRANZ ABT.

The Well-Known Musical Composer.



Franz Abt, whose death was recently announced by a cable dispatch, was born in 1819, and was, therefore, 66 years old. His parents intended him for the ministry, but having a passion for music, he chose that vocation. He was a prolific composer of songs, his compositions numbering between four and five hundred, the most popular of which is "When the Swallows Homeward Fly."

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.
If you are suffering from general debility, nervous prostration, skinless spells, etc., superinduced by impure blood, weak kidneys and liver, etc., do not resort to alcoholic compounds, nor use remedies that cause to great activity of the parts affected. It is far more wise to use a mild alterative like Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. This remedy contains nothing injurious to the most delicate constitution, and its use gradually builds up and strengthens, while diuretic and cathartic compounds tear down, wear out and destroy.
Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla restores lost vigor or lost organic functions in their normal condition, and it invariably gives satisfaction to all who use it.
Do not forget that any druggist will procure the remedy for you, especially when they tell you will not be persuaded to try some other preparation on which they make more money. You will find its effect most wonderful. Your old energy will return, your natural force come back, and you will feel altogether a new person, full of health, strength and vigor. Former maladies speak highly of the preparation, and all acknowledge it a perfect health restorer, especially in diseases of a debilitating nature having a tendency to poison and ruin the blood, thereby weakening the urinary and digestive organs, and exhausting the brain and nervous system.
Worn out and enfeebled constitutions, suffering from dyspepsia, impure blood, weak kidneys, nervousness, etc., can be cured by using this remedy. Take no other.

A Noteworthy Incident.

A young gentleman of sincere character, a member of the church of which I am pastor, gave me the following experience:

He said that, to the best of his knowledge, not a drop of any sort of intoxicating liquor had ever passed his lips. He knew it had not, so far back as he can remember in his childhood. He has, therefore, no temptation to drink—from either a strong habit or a love for the taste of wines or other liquors—and yet he maintains a daily warfare with the appetite. He has never passed a saloon without a strong inclination to enter. He has to rein himself up, and draw himself away, not to enter and take his first drink. This is not an occasional or spasmodic feeling; it is the one regular daily conflict of his life.

My friend gave graphic descriptions of one or two such pitched battles, when the desire became almost strong enough to overpower his will.

I did not ask him about his father, but I did say to him: "Was your grandfather addicted to drinking?"

He said: "No, neither he nor my father; but my great grandfather was an habitual drunkard."

I desire the young men who may be among my readers to ponder these facts, not in the light of religion, but under the illumination of science. Observations, scientifically conducted, have demonstrated the doctrines of heredity, pointed out in the Bible. Hereditary traits often leap a generation. An insane man's son may be perfectly sane, and the insanity break out in his grandson. In the crossings of marriage that tendency to insanity may be weakened, and bye and bye entirely disappear, just as any taint or stain in the blood may be largely purged out in the course of generations where marriages bring better blood into the family.

Setting aside all the teachings of the sacred scriptures, with all other ethical considerations, one's thoughts of self love should keep one in purity of living not simply for one's own sake, but for the sake of those for whose existence in the world he is responsible.

I ask the young men among my readers to go back and ponder the experience of my friend. Upon reflection I am inclined to think that it is extraordinary only in the perfect resistance which he has made to his strong inclination, up to this date. There are probably tens of thousands who, under other circumstances, have fallen. Nothing is more absurdly against the truth of history than the sintement that "such a man is only his own enemy."—Rev. C. F. Deems.

Temperance in War.

England's great military commander, Lord Wolsely, now entrusted with the Egyptian campaign, referring to his successful Red River Expedition, writes as follows:—During the thirteen weeks which elapsed between the disembarkation at Prince Arthur's landing, and our marching into Fort Garry, it rained upon forty-five days, and upon many occasions every one was wet for days together. Notwithstanding the magnitude of the labor, the exposure to inclement weather, and the great annoyance from mosquitoes thus endured, there was not throughout the whole of this arduous operation the least murmur of discontent heard from any one. From first to last there was a total absence of crime, and I may add, of sickness also. Never has any body of men on active service been more cheerful or more healthy. This has been one of the few military expeditions where spirits have formed no part of the daily ration, and where no intoxicating liquor was obtainable. I consider that the above-mentioned happy results are in a great measure to be attributed to this fact. A large ration of tea was issued instead, and I found that the men worked better do upon any previous occasions where rum formed part of their daily allowance.

"PASS UNDER THE ROD."

I saw the young bride in her beauty and pride,
Bedecked in her snowy array;
And the light flush of joy mantled high on her cheek
As she heard the death-summons say:

And the mother looked blooming and gay;
And with woman's devotion she hid her fond heart
From the spoiler of maiden love;
And she murmured her hopes to this perishing earth,
By the chain which her tenderness wove.
But I saw when those heart-strings were bleeding and torn,
And the chain had been severed in twain;
She had changed her white robes for the sables of grief,
And her bloom for the paleness of woe;
But the Healer was there, pouring balm on her heart,
And wiping the tears from her eyes;
He strengthened the chains he had broken in twain,
And fastened it fires to the skies!
Then I heard a whisper—a voice: 'Twas the voice of her God—
"I love thee, I love thee—pass under the rod!"

I saw the young maiden in tenderness bend
O'er the couch of her sick-stricken boy;
And she kissed the soft lips as they murmured her name
While her heart beat high gushing in joy.
O, sweet as the rosebud enclosed with dew,
When its fragrance is flung on the air,
So fresh and so bright is that mother to me seemed,
As by its life's fountain there.
But I saw when she gazed on that same lovely form—
Pallid, cold, and silent, and still;
But paler and colder her heart's throbbing joy,
And the life of her treasure was cold!
But the Healer was there who had stricken her love,
And with her treasure away;
To all love is not treasure as they placed it on high,
And the mourner still wept as she went.
There lived unspoken a sense: 'Twas the voice of her God—
"I love thee, I love thee—pass under the rod!"

I saw a father and mother who leaned
Up by the arm of their eldest son,
And the star in the future grew bright to their eyes,
As they saw the proud place he had won;
And the light on their pathway grew prond and free
And the staff of his manhood leads it along;
Ah, the blessings of parenthood sweet,
And I saw them again bending low over the grave
Where their heart's dearest object and hope had been laid,
And the star had gone down in the darkness of night,
And the joy from their bosom had fled;
But the Healer was there, and his arms were
And he healed them with balm of sure—
And he showed them a star in the bright upper world
Was another sheltering brilliantly there!
They looked—heard a voice: 'Twas the voice of their God—
"I love thee, I love thee—pass under the rod!"

THE OLD SONG.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOMES.

The violin'st of the classic lay
Of love and wine who sings
Must find the fingers run astray
That touched the rebel strings.

Of Cadmus he would fain have sung,
Of Atreus and Inc;
But all the locomotive engine
With songs of love and wine.

Ah, brothers! I would fain have caught
Some trochee blunt or dactyl,
My true invincible that brought,
The old familiar theme!

Love, Love! but not the assertive child
With shaft and bandaged bow,
Whose random arrows always go wild
Some three-score years ago.

Not Eros, with his joyous laugh,
The urchin tinted all by dare,
At Love, with spectacles and staff,
And sensuy, silvered hair.

Our heads with frosted locks are white,
Our roots are thin and few with snow,
But red, in chilling winter's sight,
Our hearts and hearths glow.

Our old acquaintance, Time, drops in,
And while the running sands
Their golden hour-glass unheed spin,
He warms his frozen hands.

Stay, winged hours, too swift, too sweet,
And wait this message of love
To all we miss, from all we meet,
In life's last crumbling stone:

Say that to old affection true
We long the sorrowful chain
That links our hearts—alas, how few
The links that yet remain.

The kind hearts sink to rest on all
That turn the tender to dust;
Friend after friend they break and fall—
Lines break, but never rust.

Say if one note of happier strain
Time worn our harp can afford—
One hand that trembles, not in vain—
If true accord but its chord.

Say that when Fancy closed her wings
And Eros in queer bed his tire,
Love, Love, still o'er-stood from the strings
As from Anacreon's lyre.

A LEAP-YEAR PROPOSAL.

BY HIS NONSONLY.

CHAPTER I.

"Hello, old fellow! Shall I see you at the grand ball masque? Grandest hop, and also the last one, of the season, you know. Better come!"

"No—that is, I guess I can't come. Should like to, 'pon honor; but, pressing business, you know."

The two friends, so lately met, separated. The first speaker, Carl Du Chesne, a young and rising barrister, but a few months from England, hurried to his club at the St. Frisco, while his old acquaintance, Frank Greely, a bashful young lawyer who had but lately hung out his shingle, turned toward the unpretentious rooms at the Lyons Hotel.

As he threaded his way along the narrow streets, lost in meditation, deep, profound, his thoughts ran thus:

"I don't know but I may step in, after all, if to look after my own interests alone. Let me see (thrusting his hands in his pocket); this is leap-year, sure enough. I wasn't such an idiot to run whenever I saw a pretty girl after preaching. I might have found my destiny ere this. But, here we be!"

This last exclamation was caused by finding himself in the center of a commodious room, where a huge fireplace sent forth a ruddy, pleasant glow.

"Here take it, where is my meerschaum? Whew! even my cigar case is. Why, bless my stars," he ejaculated, dazedly, at things there seen a little mix. Jerusalem! but I'm in the wrong place!"

Since enough, so last in thought had he been that he had mistaken the number, and now was, horrible to relate, in an apartment occupied by a female, per the tasty oil paintings, and exhibition of musical lore, indicated. He flew around once as in search of his room, in quest of a hat which would not appear, and was deliberating upon the consequences of leaving the key without that article, when a chorus of sweet, girlish voices arrested his horrified senses, followed by peal upon peal of silvery laughter, and the entrance at the moment to the apartment in which he was standing.

"Good Lord, deliver me!" he cried out, mentally, as he stood for one moment undecided who the—to risk all and fly pell-mell, or to cower from those rushing undiscovered in some friendly recess. He eagerly grasped at the latter probability, and made a dive for the only door in his rear, and which he found opened into a small dressing room liberally hung with numerous garments in the feminine line.

Hastily drawing the door to after him, he was not a little dis-concerted to hear an exclamation of "Oh, while that now stood on end" as he assured himself that he was a close prisoner, and at the mercy of the gay, fadeless creatures just entering the apartment he had so lately quitted.

In vain he racked his brain for some plan of escape. In vain he listened for a signal of exit from the noisy, all-confiding crimps. As well might he have thought to order from thence into an enchanted castle; and, having become invisible, return by passing through the brick and mortar wall.

At length, yielding himself to the inevitable, he crouched upon his knees at the key-hole, and eagerly essayed to take a complete survey of the entire group, the knee bags almost overwhelming in the rear; peeping, or beholding as much beauty as one could listening to feminine small talk and chatter.

He learning a picture of girls seated before the broad, rose fender, with glowing, bright cheeks and bright, sparkling eyes.

They were all chatting at once, and he could not help but admire the author's audacity.

They were evidently rendezvous having met with at a distance before to pass the witcher hours of their lives, as Sadie, Sue or Peter Ann, he could not tell. He was soon set at rest, however, upon that subject.

The sauciest looking of the four—a dashing brunette of eighteen summers—after a coquettish toss of her ringlets, began:

"Alla Caswell, I say, whom do you purpose to invite to attend you on the occasion of the 23d? It should be some one highly gifted with the art of conversing nicely, you are such a quiet little puss, you know." And she playfully pinched one ear of the young girl sitting beside her.

"Indeed, I cannot say that I have decided to ask any gentleman as yet," was the reply, a bright flush suffusing the cheek of the timid speaker.

Frank Greely, from his unenviable position, declared, mentally, that he had never seen a being half so lovely, "even in his idealistic dreams," as the little golden-haired, blue-eyed fairy named Alla Caswell.

"Oh, die! coz! You should run and hide your face for shame, and this leap year!" exclaimed bright, merry Alice Caswell, Alla's own cousin on her father's side of the family.

"I did not think that you were so cowardly, dear," said Grace Dalrymple, sweetly. "Here have we all three selected our cavaliers, while you, little coaxer, are 'non est.' Pour, timid dare ling!"

This was more than the sensitive girl could endure quietly, and after bestowing a fiery glance of indignation upon the last speaker she responded, impulsively:

"I am not certain that I am compelled to select any one, and as for being cowardly, I had much rather be called that than too forward. But forgive me, dear," she suddenly exclaimed, noting by chance the expression of wounded pride and shocked surprise so on her friend's face. "I did not mean to wound you by my thoughtless words; I have been calculating all the time to choose some one of my gentlemen friends, but am so stupid that I really cannot make up my mind as to whom it shall be. And then, you know, if I should meet with a refusal I should die of shame—I know I should. Please help me, girls."

Tears now started into the gentle girl's eyes, and she turned away in confusion.

Tears now started into the gentle girl's eyes, and she turned away in confusion.

"Indeed, we will try to help you," chorused the three, eagerly.

"The first step taken, then, should be to lead her into the society of the names of our escorts, I think," said Grace Dalrymple, brightly.

"Yes, and invite him when his intimate friend—his greatest chum—is allowed to remain in his dusty office, to count all of the spider-webs, and pore over Blackstone and Coke! Oh, for how could you, girls!" she said, reprovingly.

"How did we know?" they all three pleaded, dazedly.

"Oh, I have it?" exclaimed Cora Beaufort, cocking her little head on one side like a robin, and bolting up once from her seat as if shot. "Jim, it is, then! Why cannot Alla ask Mr. Greely for her cavalier, I should like to know?"

"Why, indeed," was the general response.

But the young lady in question was mute.

"Why don't you thank us for helping you in your selection, Alla?" asked Grace, with a becoming pout of her cherry lips.

"I scarcely think I dare!" was the blushing answer.

"She expects us to pop the question for her, girls," exclaimed Alice, with a merry little laugh.

"Oh, goodness me! He would jump completely out of his—his—office window, and make straight for the river," said Cora Beaufort, arising to her feet and executing a charming little pirouette upon one beautifully buttoned foot.

"I will ask him myself, thank you," responded Alla Caswell, drawing her self haughtily up to her full height.

"Good gracious, Alla Caswell! What ever can you mean? You will pop the question, indeed, did you say? I will wager you a new hat that you dare not."

"You are too bad, girls," exclaimed Alla, beginning to cry with vexation.

"Oh, Alla, if you only would!" exclaimed Grace and Alice in concert.

"Yes, come! Do promise that you will, and we will never tell that it was you. You can disguise your voice effectually, and be, for the rest, why you will be masked, you know," said Cora, pleadingly.

Forgetful for the time of the disguise which concealed her features, and lacking somewhat in the very necessary requirement, self-confidence, Alla buried her face in her hands to hide the crimson lit skies, and burst into tears.

"Whatever is the matter, Alla—Miss Caswell?" asked the concerned cavalier, oblivious of prudence for the moment.

"I—that is—how did you know my name is Miss Caswell?" queried poor Alla, striving in vain to appear dignified and angry.

"Hush! do not draw needless attention. Let us come to an understanding. Is there not some question which you desired my answer to, to-night? Say, do not deny that there is, for I know all about it."

"You—you know! impossible," ejaculated Alla, through pale lips.

"No? Now sit down here, dear Miss Caswell—Alla, if I may call you by that dear title—and let me suggest to you a mode of silencing forever the teazing of those meddling girls in regard to this evening."

And he popped the question, then and there.

An ominous silence ensued. A slight rustle of the heavy damask curtains which shaded the window failed to attract their attention, while silence for a time reigned supreme.

"I do not know! Indeed, I cannot think now. Please, oh, please, Mr. Greely, take me home," she pleaded. Her head whirled and she felt dizzy and ill.

The next day Frank Greely was seen by Mrs. Grundy departing from the Caswell mansion with a look of triumphant happiness glorifying his fine features, while, strange to say, his extreme bashfulness had in a great measure fled.

Wedding cards in a few months were circulating, sure harbingers of a very happy future.

Soon after the wedding the three young ladies of our acquaintance met to discuss the appearance of the bride upon that occasion and things in general.

"Well, now what do you think of leap-year proposals, Grace Dalrymple?" asked Cora Beaufort, creasing her chin in one hand, while beating a restless tattoo upon the carpet.

"Why, I think, as most people would under the circumstances, that Alla Caswell did uncommonly well," was the laughing rejoinder.

"Go then and do likewise, Alice!" said Cora Beaufort, chucking her friend tauntingly under the chin.

"Perhaps I might if she had not spoken so low that we failed to catch Alla's successful mode," she replied, pertinently.

"At all events, we shall have to wait our turn for four years, girls!"

A Lesson in Advertising.

The lonesome Jersey sign-board, standing deep in the flood and cold rain, in the rain, warning people not to have a picnic in flannel suits and lawn dresses that afternoon, brought to my mind a long, dreary, dismal November day I once passed—how I passed it, only a merciful Providence knows—in Chapin, Ill. Chapin is a junction town not quite so large as the Eagle business office. It rained all that day. It got about dusk at night to set in and kept raining harder every hour. I had to wait all day long for the train I wanted. In the afternoon, when my letters were all answered and my newspaper work was accomplished, I stood at the window and looked dolefully out on the flooded landscape. The trees stood knee deep in the water. Everything was dripping. Not a sparrow was to be seen. The fountain, bedecked with choice color and color were placed here and there, while tasty wreaths of the same adorned the pantaloons suspended from the ceiling.

At the entrance of the mas querades the band struck up a lively march, which continued until the last one had arrived.

Then all was lively chatter and general conviviality, no one striving to pierce the other's disguise.

The dancing was at its height. The "beautiful waltz" music, and other waltzes from Strauss were being creditably rendered, and floated in all their melodious fullness, exciting rapture not upon the still night air.

In a small alcove, resting from the fatigues of the dance, a couple were seated on a cozy tete-a-tete, pantingly silent.

The lady, in her disguise as a flower-girl, appeared graceful and charmingly petite in the costume which she had chosen. The gentleman, as a French courier, appeared to advantage, his tall, commanding figure singularly adapted to the representation. Screened from view by the folds of the heavy damask curtains, which effectually shut out the window with its deep embrasure for the interior, were huddled three feminine forms bent on eavesdropping.

"Is not that music entrancing, na petite?" was the courteous query which broke the lengthening silence.

"Yes, it is be autiful" was the response, in a low, sweet tone. "Shall we join the waltzers, sir?"

"Not without you particularly wish it," he replied, politely.

"When Alla Caswell have a fitting opportunity to keep her promise to those teasing girls, and relieve her mind of that which weighs so heavily upon her uppermost in her thoughts, whatever she might do?" This was the question which Alla Caswell asked herself as she sat twirling a small circle upon her finger, while listening apparently to the charming Strauss air.

"I will soon have it done with, and then run away somewhere where no one may find me," she soliloquized.

"A penny for your thoughts, fair lady!" come the deep, manly voice just beside her.

Forgetful for the time of the disguise which concealed her features, and lacking somewhat in the very necessary requirement, self-confidence, Alla buried her face in her hands to hide the crimson lit skies, and burst into tears.

"Whatever is the matter, Alla—Miss Caswell?" asked the concerned cavalier, oblivious of prudence for the moment.

"I—that is—how did you know my name?"

"Hush! do not draw needless attention. Let us come to an understanding. Is there not some question which you desired my answer to, to-night? Say, do not deny that there is, for I know all about it."

"You—you know! impossible," ejaculated Alla, through pale lips.

"No? Now sit down here, dear Miss Caswell—Alla, if I may call you by that dear title—and let me suggest to you a mode of silencing forever the teazing of those meddling girls in regard to this evening."

And he popped the question, then and there.

An ominous silence ensued. A slight rustle of the heavy damask curtains which shaded the window failed to attract their attention, while silence for a time reigned supreme.

"I do not know! Indeed, I cannot think now. Please, oh, please, Mr. Greely, take me home," she pleaded. Her head whirled and she felt dizzy and ill.

The next day Frank Greely was seen by Mrs. Grundy departing from the Caswell mansion with a look of triumphant happiness glorifying his fine features, while, strange to say, his extreme bashfulness had in a great measure fled.

Wedding cards in a few months were circulating, sure harbingers of a very happy future.

Soon after the wedding the three young ladies of our acquaintance met to discuss the appearance of the bride upon that occasion and things in general.

"Well, now what do you think of leap-year proposals, Grace Dalrymple?" asked Cora Beaufort, creasing her chin in one hand, while beating a restless tattoo upon the carpet.

"Why, I think, as most people would under the circumstances, that Alla Caswell did uncommonly well," was the laughing rejoinder.

"Go then and do likewise, Alice!" said Cora Beaufort, chucking her friend tauntingly under the chin.

"Perhaps I might if she had not spoken so low that we failed to catch Alla's successful mode," she replied, pertinently.

"At all events, we shall have to wait our turn for four years, girls!"

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

THE Senate passed the following bills at its session of April 22: Authorizing Sanilac, Saginaw County, to borrow money to build a bridge; for the relief of George P. Baker. Many petitions were received for the submission of the prohibitory amendment; also numerous remonstrances against the passage of the liquor license to a minority of shareholders representing a majority of directors in joint stock companies. The House occupied its time chiefly in calling the calendar, passing finally but one bill, appropriating $8,000 to celebrate the fifth anniversary of Michigan's admission as a state, including Principals, Superintendents, and Inspectors of Schools ineligible to the office of County School Examiner; amending the charter of the village of Ypsilanti; amending the election law by the adoption of the Canadian plan of ballot and voting.

RESOLUTIONS of the Detroit Common Council asking that an annexation bill in accord by the Council be passed were received by the Senate at the session of April 23. The following bills were passed: Amending act 206 of 1857, relative to the erection of fish; amending the Bullard city charter; incorporating the city of Wyandotte. The Governor noted his approval of the following acts: Providing for a joint commission to investigate and report as to the feasibility of connecting the Hamtramck Arsenal property with the soldiers' home; amending Section 20, chapter 3, relative to breaking land tenements; amending Section 2, Howell, relative to the duties of township clerks; providing for the public instruction of deaf mutes; amending the Constitution relative to the Governor's veto power; to extend the time for completing the Michigan Central railroad to Chicago; to amend the charter of the village of Ypsilanti; to amend the charter of the city of Detroit; to provide for the construction of a highway bridge across the Saginaw River, connecting Bridgeport and Saginaw City. The House then passed the following bills: To exempt the property of certain soldiers and sailors from taxation; to amend Section 1, chapter 3, relative to the duties of highway commissioners; to amend Section 1, chapter 3, relative to the duties of highway commissioners; to amend Section 1, chapter 3, relative to the duties of highway commissioners

The Liquor Curse.

Virtues go in families. One of these family groups is "faith, hope, charity;" another is "long suffering, gentleness, goodness;" another is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." The same is true of vices. "Filthiness, foolish talking and jesting" are classed together as if in close relationship. So are "bitterness, wrath, anger, clamor, evilspeaking and all malice;" and so are "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like." We often hear of parent vices, and what vice is not the parent of a vile and various progeny of vices? What form of sin is not infinitely productive and reproductive? What crime does not lead to crime? What evil does not draw other evils in its train? What curse is not cumulative?

Certainly the liquor curse has roots and branches without number. Certainly the drinking saloon is one of the chief synagogues of Satan. It is not only that drunkenness is born and bred there; this is but the begining of the evil wrought. The lowest and basest passions are fired there; contention and strife spring up there, and murder often does its bloody work there. Crime in all its forms sucks not in vain for hellish inspiration there; oaths and curses resound there; the whole vocabulary of profanity can be acquired there. Sabbath breaking finds its chief harbors there; and infidelity under all its forms gains unrebuked utterance there. The chief antagonism that the church finds throughout our land is there, with its scores of attendants where the church has its units, and there on the holy day and every day alike. The barkeeper is the most dangerous rival of the minister; and not only is he this, but he is also the rival and the adversary of every philanthropist, every moralist and every reformer. The awful business in which he is an active agent in a direct attack not only upon the church, but to the community as a nuisance to every home, and the dread of every loving heart that has a son, or husband, or lover, or friend exposed to its insidious temptations. The liquor traffic, whether conducted at retail or at wholesale, is a traffic in the peace and safety and prosperity of the people, and not only those who profit by it or who patronize it, but all who in neglect for it, or palliate or excuse its atrocities are aiders and abetters in its spreading desolations.

God be thanked, the multiplied legislations of thousands of this foul iniquity have somewhat of the praise even to suppose that "prohibition" is now becoming the temperance watchword of everybody. Agitations and appeals and exercises for an evil which has eaten like a canker into the most vital interests of the family, the church and the community, are becoming incidental to the times. Temperance societies, and temperance literature, and temperance lectures, and temperance sermons, and temperance prayer-meetings, and temperance legislation, and temperance elections, and temperance pledges, and temperance processions, and temperance banners, and temperance mottoes, and temperance songs, and temperance everything, are becoming the all-pervading atmosphere of the land. God speed the day! S. Christian, D. D.

Temperance work is a grand good work for young people to engage in. A cause which really needs its young hands—being supported with a force of sweetness and light which will make a beautiful as well as powerful thing of it. And the moral man is doing something in their lives, too, those who give themselves to temperance work.—Exchange.

A young man was passed by for the honor of a nomination at a Chicago democratic convention, recently, because he was a total abstainer. Those who voted against him said that they could not trust a man who would not drink with them.

HIGH-PRICED HUMANITY.

She was ready for bed and lay on my arm,
In her little frilled cap so fine,
With her golden hair falling out at the edge,
Like a circle of moon sunshine.
And I hummed the old tune of "Blueberry Cross,"
And "There men who put out to sea,"
When she sleepily said, as she closed her blue eyes,
"Papa, tot would you take for me?"

And I answered, "A dollar, dear little heart,"
And she slept, baby-weary with play,
But I held her warm in my love-strong arms,
And rocked her, and rocked away.
O, the dollar meant all the world to me,
The land and the sea and sky,
The lowest depth of the lowest place,
The highest of all that's high.

The cities with streets and palaces,
Their pictures and stories of art,
I would not take for one low, soft throb
Of my little one's loving heart.
Nor all the gold that was ever found
In the busy, wealth-finding past
Would I take for one smile of my darling's face
Did I know it must be the last.

So I rocked my baby and rocked away,
And I felt such a sweet content,
For the words of the song expressed to me more
Than they ever before had meant.
And the night crept on and I slept and dreamed
Of things far too glad to be,
And I awakened with lips saying close to my ear,
"Papa, tot would you take for me?"

Starved Into Submission.

It is a singular fact that the only industries in this country in which men can be literally starved into subjection are those commonly known as protected. When masons, carpenters, street car employes, railroad men, or others not in any way protected by the tariff strike for more pay or against a reduction they either succeed, go to work just as well fed as ever after awhile at their employers' terms, or leave the country and seek occupation elsewhere. It is not so with the tariff protected coal miners. When they strike they are usually starved into submission. That is the proper excuse for it. The companies win by starving their men and their families.

The sorrowful results of these strikes are announced in telegrams of three or four lines, as was the conclusion of the lockout at Scot Haven, Pa., this week. Fifteen hundred men at that place were compelled to work at the figures proposed or starve to death, and seeing no escape they signed the contract imposed upon them.

Many devices are resorted to to make the starvation policy efficacious. Combinations are formed against the strikers. Living in houses owned by their employers, they are thrust into the street, being dependent upon stores owned by their employers, they are refused credit there, and, not having access to other traders, they are helpless. It does not take long to reduce men thus situated to despair, to make their children cry for bread, or to bring upon them all the miseries of a famine. When it is considered that these people are so abjectly poor to begin with that such a thing as moving to a new place is out of the question, a pretty clear idea of the helplessness of the tariff protected laborers of the country may be gained. A tree is known by its fruit. The tariff tree brings forth no other fruit than this so far as the laborer is concerned.

The world may be challenged to produce wretchedness greater than that which exists among the Eastern coal miners during the greater part of the year, though they are the men whom the paid agents of the tariff monopoly assert that the protective policy enriches, ennobles and dignifies. Protection is a crime fortified by falsehood.—Chicago Herald.

On Saturday last the federal court of Salt Lake City sentenced three leading mormons, Angus Cannon, Milton Musser, and J. C. Watson, to the full extent of the statute against "unlawful cohabitation" $300 fine and six months' imprisonment. Cannon claimed to have lived with but one of his wives "on a visit," but as he neglected to specify his view as to the status of the others, and declined to give any promises as to the future, his sentence was not mitigated. The other two were defiant. This action of the court is to be taken as the governmental comment upon the mormon protest of a week ago. It cannot fail to have a healthy effect in strengthening the hands of the anti-polygamous section of the mormon church. It shows that at last the United States has taken hold of the twin relic in earnest. Polygamy must go.—Chicago Daily News.

O, for one generation of clean and upstanding men—men whose veins are not fed with fire men fit to be the companions of pure women men worthy to be the fathers of children; men who do not stumble upon rock or apoplexy at midage, or go staggering down into a drunkard's grave; but who can sit and look into the faces of their grandchildren with eyes undimmed and hearts unsmirched. Such a generation as this is possible in America, and to produce such a revolution the persistent, conscientious work of temperance reformers is competent.—Dr. R. H. McDonald.

Christian Herald: "If the only keeps on as it has begun," is the phrase we see appended to some gingerly utterance of praise of the President. But suppose he does not keep on as he has begun, has he not done well? If so, say so, and let us wait without suspicion to see how he will keep on. He is winning an immense consent to-day on all sides of all party lines. Success to him.

Washington, May 6.—It was stated at the postoffice department to-day that postmaster Palmer of Chicago was removed for "offensive partisanship" The Postmaster-General said that Mr. Palmer was an active worker in the recent campaign and one of those Republicans whose continuance in office was not deemed advisable by the Administration.

Deer Hunting in Yucatan.

Deer abound in the neighborhood of Abala. In hunting them several men place themselves so as to form an extended circle, within shouting distance of each other. A few go within the circle and make as many discordant sounds as they can summon to their lips, so as to frighten all living things under the brush. Startled, the game seeks safety in flight. Then the men near whom the game happens to pass shoot, sometimes wounding dangerously or killing a companion, particularly when, as on some occasions, the circle closes in to bring all the game to one spot. Owing to the danger incurred in the hunt, it has been prohibited, but the Indians are very loath to give up the customs of their ancestors, and in the villages no one interferes with them. Ten, twelve, and even more deer are caught at once; then the hunters roast them; otherwise the meat would not keep fresh until sold. The cooking is done in the following manner: A hundred or three feet deep is made in the ground, and large stones placed in the bottom; on them a fire is built. When the stones are very hot some are taken out. Plantain leaves are spread over those that remain, and the animal, having been stripped of its skin, is laid thereon. Other plantain leaves are put over it, then the hot stones that have been taken out, and over all, earth. In two or three hours the deer is thoroughly cooked and is very tender and juicy. The deer-skin when tanned is worth three or four dollars. It is used for making boots, large numbers being exported to the United States.—Alice D. le Plongeon, in Harper's Magazine for February.

The local heathen Chinee rather more than holds his own in some respects, and many of the children of the better class of Mongolians have attended school to some purpose, despite the school-restriction law under which they labor. The other day a California street matron, just returned from a three years' tour abroad, advertised for a first-class cook, whereupon an intelligent-looking pigtail applied for the position.

"Whatee you name, John?" asked the lady in that peculiar baby talk supposed to be adapted to infants and other foreigners.

"Wau Lee."

"You sabe boast turkiee, Wau?" lisped the lady.

The Chinaman knit his brows and shook his head.

"Oh! dear me!" said the tourist to her imported maid, in what is known here as Mills Seminary—and abroad as restaurant—French; "what am I to do? I can't make him understand."

"It is very unfortunate," said the Chinaman, reflectively. "I see you don't speak French very well, and besides that Chinese and English are the only languages I know."

He was not engaged.—San Francisco Post.

The poor, harassed victim had been in the chair a long time. The barber had talked with a fiendish industry. A sardonic smile pervading his features, while he shaved with a degree of deliberation heretofore supposed to be established in the adage in which the mills of the gods have been starring for so many seasons.

At last the victim's eyes closed, his muscles relaxed, and he fell into the corner of the chair in a convulsive heap. The barber was smiling the smile of a victor, when the object of his indignity suddenly sprang to a sitting position, at the risk of having his neck sheared, and exclaimed:

"Barber, what day of the month is it?"

"The eighth, sah."

"And what day was it when I came in here?"

White House employees claim that no precaution of any kind has ever been taken to protect the President from assassination.

The count of the cash in the National Treasury is practically completed. The only discrepancy is 2 cents arising from a $5 package of pennies.

POLITICAL.

The President has commissioned the following Postmasters: Hugh V. Gavigan, at Columbus, Kan.; A. H. Morgan, Way Station, Ind. T.; Thomas Gregg, Muscogee, Ind. T.; H. D. Edwards, Waterloo, Iowa; James T. Stuart, Van Buren, Kan.

The President has appointed S. Compton Judd Postmaster at Chicago, vice Frank W. Palmer, suspended. A Chicago dispatch says "the removal of Postmaster Palmer results from the feeling against him in Washington by the Democratic opponents of formal charges of offensive partisanship. Among these charges it is instanced that he last fall closed the postoffice and mail-stations before regular hours, and gave orders to the employes to help swell the Blaine boom' and procession on the evenings of the Plumed Knight's visit; that he erected a platform at Government expense, across to which was laid only to his friends through the mailing-room that he delivered political documents through the carriers outside of the mails; that he organized the carriers into a special force to take a census of voters; and that postoffice employees were sent to this city in October, where some of them were sworn in and acted as Marshals. It has also been urged against him that his private office and the office of one of his lieutenants have been used as a rendezvous by certain Republican State Senators and Representatives, and that a part of the canvassing in the interest of John A. Logan for United States Senator has been done in the postoffice."——A Washington dispatch says that "Paul Selby, Postmaster at Springfield, is likely to give place to Mr. Clendenning, on account of bitter newspaper attacks on the Democratic candidate for President."

FOREIGN.

Mr. Gladstone informed the House of Commons that Sir Peter Lumsden had been requested to return to England with Col. Stewart as communications with Russia. In regard to the Afghan frontier would henceforth be conducted in London. It is again hinted that the new arrangement contemplates the withdrawal of Peudjeh to Herat. A London cabdesman says: "England has unreservedly thrown up her hand, and it only remains to be seen whether Muscovite arrogance, elated by its unexpected success, will not lobbly grasp for more. There appears to be no reason why Russia should not grasp for more, for they have their pieces in position to do it, and, after the recent craven surrender, they would be justified in assuming that no amount of insult would force Gladstone into a fight. London is simply speechless with rage this afternoon at last night's disclosures. Mr. Gobbsing the colonial office from the Dufferin speeches deliver the gangway. Lord Randolph Churchill's long speech was really a masterly indictment, and is in every mouth to-day. Its indictment words are quoted on all sides, as they were charged to the echo as I might. Every one is in a state of such a vast contempt at that afforded by Mr. Gladstone's speech of a week ago and the statement he made last night does not exist elsewhere in the history of politics, not even in his own career, and the bitterness of the wrath at him defies description. To-day we are getting the first instalment of a new series of foreign loans over English counsellor from Berlin, Paris, Dublin, and even from Rome, and you can imagine how they sting."

A recent dispatch from Battleford says: "The region north and west of here is full of hostiles. In fact, all the Indians west of Battleford are in war paint. The settlers have all fled. John Watkins Law and Albert Barkless, both from Ontario, were killed by Big Bear's band over a week ago. Their wives and the wives of the two missionaries are prisoners. Scouts from the north report that there will have a fearful time at Poundmaker, Little Child, and all other chiefs are on the war-path. A number of half-breeds are directing them. There is a perfect panic in the Eleanor districts. Scores of homesteads have been looted. A courier brings news of the capture of four white women by Big Bear's band, including the wives of two missionaries. All are being frightfully maltreated."

Two of the Colombian rebel leaders who were responsible for the recent troubles on the Isthmus of Panama were tried by court-martial and hanged.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At the annual meeting of stockholders of the Niekerbocker Ice Company, W. C. Whitney and Stephenson Burke were chosen. The total earnings for 1884 were $1,207,704, leaving a deficiency of $423,362. The stock and funded debt represent $8,062,930.

The Indians about Quappelle, says a Winnipeg dispatch, are greatly excited over the movements of the half-breeds, and are said to be of the reserve. A general uprising of savages is now feared more than ever. Trowfoot, the great chief of the Blackfeet, and the natural brother of Poundmaker, Crowfoot is at present not well disposed toward the Government. Maj. Walsh from the Qu'Appelle Valley will not unescore their captives. He does not put the fighting strength of the Indians north of the Saskatchewan at more than 3,000.

An Arkansas City (Kan.) special says: "The cattlemen in the Oklahoma country have had orders to vacate by the 20th of this month, and in order to force them out the cattle trust have combined to withhold from them and their cattle together. They are purchasing saddle-horses and hiring men to round up stock, and if the order is not complied, the President then appoints the commission provided for by the last Congress the colonists will wait patiently until said commission makes its report; meantime no more will be made by them to embarass the administration. Ben. Hatch is still here with his colonists."

The Chief of Police at St. Louis has called to the American Consul at Auckland, New Zealand, to hold Maxwell, the supposed murderer of Jewell Bedford, on the ground that arrival of a Missouri officer. Secretary Bayard has a so been requested to argue upon the British Minister at Washington to the end that Maxwell may not get an technicality in the meantime. An officer will sail from San Francisco June 6.

The eleventh quadrennial celebration took part in the reunion of the Army of the Potomac met at Baltimore. In the absence of Gen. Grant, Vice President H. J. Hunt called the general meeting to order. Gen. Grant was re-elected President.

FOREIGN.

Mr. Gladstone informed the House of Commons that Sir Peter Lumsden had been requested to return to England with Col. Stewart as communications with Russia. In regard to the Afghan frontier would henceforth be conducted in London. It is again hinted that the new arrangement contemplates the withdrawal of Peudjeh to Herat. A London cabdesman says: "England has unreservedly thrown up her hand, and it only remains to be seen whether Muscovite arrogance, elated by its unexpected success, will not lobbly grasp for more. There appears to be no reason why Russia should not grasp for more, for they have their pieces in position to do it, and, after the recent craven surrender, they would be justified in assuming that no amount of insult would force Gladstone into a fight. London is simply speechless with rage this afternoon at last night's disclosures. Mr. Gobbsing the colonial office from the Dufferin speeches deliver the gangway. Lord Randolph Churchill's long speech was really a masterly indictment, and is in every mouth to-day. Its indictment words are quoted on all sides, as they were charged to the echo as I might. Every one is in a state of such a vast contempt at that afforded by Mr. Gladstone's speech of a week ago and the statement he made last night does not exist elsewhere in the history of politics, not even in his own career, and the bitterness of the wrath at him defies description. To-day we are getting the first instalment of a new series of foreign loans over English counsellor from Berlin, Paris, Dublin, and even from Rome, and you can imagine how they sting."

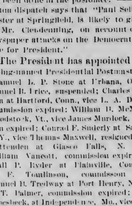
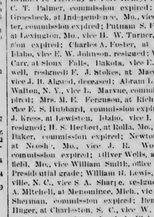
A. M. KELLEY, MINISTER TO AUSTRIA.

Anthony M. Kelley, our new representative to the Austrian Court, is a lawyer of prominence and successful practice at Richmond, Va. He has been Mayor of that city, and was for several years Chairman of the Democratic State Committee. The Democratic Congressmen from Virginia unanimously urged his appointment to a foreign mission.



RASMUS B. ANDERSON, MINISTER TO DENMARK.

Prof. R. B. Anderson of Wisconsin, whom President Cleveland has selected as our Minister to Denmark, is a well-known American scholar, whose translations of Scandinavian authors have made his name known to scholars everywhere. He is a Professor in the University at Madison, Wis., where he was born in 1835. His father, Bjorn Anderson, was among the first large company of emigrants that came from Norway to this country.



CHARLES W. BUCK, MINISTER TO PERU.

President Cleveland's appointee as Minister to Peru is a Louisville lawyer of ability and considerable local reputation, both as a jurist and scientist, his chief studies in the latter line having been especially in the direction of fruit culture, for which he has a passion. In his appointment to the Peruvian mission, the administration has definitely secured a scion of the United States, the identity of interests of which is becoming constantly more fully admitted.

A CHAPTER OF DISASTERS

A New York Tenement House Horror —Terrible Boiler Explosion at Galveston, Texas.

Three Persons Cremated at Watertown, N. Y.—Two Brave Chicago Firemen Killed.

Eight People Cremated.

Another tenement-house horror is reported by telegraph from New York. Fire broke out at midnight in the rear of John Humphrey's restaurant, in First avenue, and, before the flames could be subdued or the occupants of the building rescued, their unfortunate human beings were cremated. They were: Joseph Humphrey, aged 35; Henry Humphrey, aged 3 months; Miss Elizabeth Harley, aged 25; Miss Christina Koerner, aged 19; Mrs. Mina Kretchmar, aged 32; Kretchmar, aged 11; William Humphrey, aged 5; Mary, a sister of Mrs. Humphrey, aged 45. Besides the killed, fourteen persons were injured, some of them very seriously. The following were partly suffocated: Mrs. Ida Hasbrook, aged 32; Albert Koerner, aged 12; Miss Kate hoerner, aged 28; Willi m Flannagan, aged 10; George Hirtler, aged 35; Mrs. Eliza Hirtler, aged 35; Mrs. Kate Hunbacher, aged 26; Katie Hunbacher, aged 2; Martha and Alfred Kretchmar, aged respectively 8 and 12 years; an infant child of Mrs. Hasbrook.

The following just such a log-basket by jumping from windows: Emilie Kretchmar, aged 12; Willie Hasbrook, aged 7; and Rosalie Humphrey, aged 12.

At the time of the fire there were eight families in the house, with a total of thirty-seven souls.

One man saved his wife and three children by tossing them, one at a time, from a second-story window into the arms of a crowd of people below. Another saved his wife and three children by lowering them with a rope.

Terrible Destruction by an Exploding Boiler.

The city of Galveston, Tex., was shook from cellar to cupola, the other evening, by an explosion in the engine-room of the Tremont Hotel. People in the vicinity, says a correspondent, say the explosion was the building simultaneously exploded into a thousand pieces, and, as I believe, from which cause the hideous morning miscellaneous of varied description accompanied the explosion. The second immediately followed by a terrific crashing crash. The main building was razed and trembled as if in the throes of a colossal earthquake.

The other houses was equ lately demolished, quently, from a more distant point, the hotel. The all manner fell with a crash, while from the ruins could be seen arising a fearful tumult of sixty horse-power lashes. This was driven into fearful recovery a distance of 200 feet, crashing in its course the north end of a two-story brick building, carrying in front of the wreck, careening upward it crashed and plunged the four of a two-story blacksmith and wheelwright shop. Then plunging downward, it demolished the eight-roller three-stand tenement-houses occupied by negroes, and finally came to rest in the middle of the same room or which was occupied by a negro and woman. Upon the floor of the latter lay an iron dropping, crushing it into kindling, killing the woman and terribly injuring the man. The scene in the immediate vicinity of the explosion presented a ghastly, sickening spectacle. Ready and willing hands exhumed from the debris a dozen or more of the dead and wounded—the latter in the second story was found the body of Mr. Lazan, with his throat cut and his arms. While attempting to escape they had been overtaken by the flames. There appears a slight decrease in acreage sown, and no winter-killing whatever, or damage of other kind. With this one exception the loss to the crop is entirely natural, and the prospect ever known, and will prove a serious blow to many of the States that depend largely upon their wheat product.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

By an almost unanimous vote, both houses of the legislature, on the 29th ult., passed a joint resolution that temporarily legalizes over the first sales of land delinquents for taxes for 1882, that were advertised to take place in several counties as early as May 4, with others to follow in other counties within a short time thereafter. It was promptly signed by the Governor, and prevents temporary relief until the Legislature can prepare and pass a new tax law to take the place of the one made at the special session of 1882, and now declared unconstitutional. The resolution reads: WHEREAS, By an equal division of the Supreme Court in two cases brought before said court grave doubt is thrown upon the constitutionality of the tax law of last session; and WHEREAS, By reason of said doubt a large amount of litigation and expense will be likely to arise should further sales be made under such law; therefore Resolved, By the Senate of the State of Michigan, the House of Representatives concurring therein, that the Auditor General be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to suspend the sale directed in act 244 of 1885, now authorized to take place Monday, May 4, 1885, and such other sales as the Legislature may authorize and direct, either by resolution or the enactment of a statute, during the present session and the following sales passed: Isaac Chapman, Lapeer county, 160 acres; Lapeer city charter; amending act No. 185, 1883, relative to the Upper Peninsula Police Force; relative to the steamer Pere Marquette; Detroit Board of Water Commissioners; to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among cattle. The bill to regulate the practice of law in this State was defeated, and the bill added. The Senate, in concurring in the House amendments to the bill of Charles B. Lawton, of Lawton, as Commissioner of Soldiers' Homestead, to Wright, creating Fred Wills Lieutenant, aged 7; and Rosalie Hunsberger, aged 12.

At the time of the fire there were eight families in the house, with a total of thirty-seven souls.

A DARING DEED.

A Single Train Robber Gets Away with $3,000 on the New Albany Road.

He Enters the Car and Clubs and Shoots the Messenger and Bag-gagemen.

Bloomington, Ind., and the surrounding country were last week thrown into a wild state of excitement over what is probably the most daring robbery ever committed in the State by any one person, the facts of which constitute a story of crime almost unequaled on the frontier of the far West, and revive memories of the darkest deeds of the James d lays and their fellow-bandits. Shortly after midnight, near what is known as Smithville Hill, express train No. 3 on the Monon Route, which left Louisville at 7 p. m. for Chicago, was robbed by one man, and two men were shot so badly that neither will recover. The train was running slower than usual and just entering a small rock cut, when the ball in the engine was sounded and the engineer stopped his train. Conductor Chambers, in charge, was in the ladies' coach and passed through the smoker into the baggage-car. There a fearful scene met his eyes. Two men, the baggagemaster and express messenger, lay on the floor covered with blood. The safe of the American Express Company was open and the messenger was in confusion. The situation needed no explanation. A robbery had been committed, and the mett, faithful hero, was down like the dogs.

The train was at once run to Bloomington, where an alarm was given and the wounded men cared for. George Davis, the express messenger, was unconscious, and speaking was impossible. He recovered consciousness enough to write on a piece of paper the following message to the two bosses, and it was at once referred to the Judiciary Committee of the two bodies:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE MICHIGAN,
LANSING, April 28, 1885.

To the Legislature—

I permit me again call your attention to the matter of a "Purchasing Board."

Since my recommendation, and after further investigation, I have changed my views somewhat, and have now formed a plan somewhat different, but more in accordance with such recommendations as will secure the greatest economy and responsibility. I will send a message to the Legislature on this subject next week, and will then submit such suggestions as my experience in the State prison and House of Correction in such matters may suggest.

Respectfully,
JNO. J. BAGLEY.

Lansing, Mich., May 11.—The house today passed to a third reading the bill to pay state bounty of $100 to all soldiers who served in the army from Michigan during the rebellion, and who have not been paid state bounty. The amount is to be distributed over three years, the payment to be provided for this session. The bill provides for the expenditure of upward of $2,000,000.

The whiskey bottle and the wine bot. tle have almost entirely disappeared from the parlors of the ladies; and it is only fair to say that no young woman who sets any high valuation on her own self-respect, or upon the good character of the young men who call upon her, will turn her home into a gin mill and offer, perhaps, the first glass to a young man, whose future may be that of a hopeless drunkard. Chicago News.

Dr. Mary Walker.

Speaking of the Mexican pensions and those entitled to them calls to mind an incident at the door of the House recently. Dr. Mary Walker was promenading about the door in a new pair of pants and silk hat, cracking jokes with the doorkeepers and waiting for some member to come out to whom she had not a card, when she resolved to ask about the Pension bill and make some reference to the Mexican pension matter, "by the way, Doctor," said one of the Tammany braves who happened to be on duty at the door just at that hour, "by the way, Doctor, you were engaged in the Mexican war, were you not?" There was a roar of laughter from the crowd that had gathered as it always does gather where Dr. Mary Walker is to be seen, and for a moment the "Doctor" seemed to be nonplussed, but of course, the Mexican veterans are counted pretty aged. Rallying in a moment, however, she joined in the laugh, and as it subsided bowed with mock dignity to the joker, thanking him for the compliment. "Thank you for the compliment," she said, "for it argues that I must have been extremely good looking to look as well as I now do at the age which all Mexican pensioners have reached." It is a pretty cold day when Dr. Mary is effectually "bluffed." She is always in the thickest of the fray, is always feeling best when she is most stirred at, and ready to joke with anybody who jokes, or fight anybody who wags a fight. She picks up rather a precarious living, practicing medicine a little, worrying a few claims through the departments or through Congress, doing various sorts of jobs, men's work mostly, and seems to be quite content, on the average, with her lot.

"Opened by Mistake."

"There has been a mistake—a dreadful mistake," she said as she called at the chief clerk's window in the Postoffice yesterday.

"What is the matter, ma'am?"

"Why, I called here on Saturday for a letter."

"And I hope you got one."

"Yes, sir. My husband is in Buffalo, you know, and I've been expecting a letter from him every day for a fortnight. He was to send me some money, you know, and I was on my last shilling when I got that letter."

"Well?"

"Well, sir, I hurried right home and opened the letter and out fell a dollar bill. Just think of a loving husband sending his loving wife a dollar bill with which to run the house and preserve her station in society for a whole month!"

"But you put the money in your pocket and burned the letter."

"Oh, no sir? I threw the bill into the fire and set out to read the letter. It started off with 'Dear Madam,' and then I began to suspect something, as my husband always call me his angel. And then it went on to say: 'Do you want a bangle, eh? Well, take the inclosed and jingle down town and bangle your old head off and be hanged to you!' Oh, sir, I nearly fainted!"

"Well?"

"Well, I looked down at the signature, and it was signed 'Slouch.' Then I saw, sir, that it couldn't be from my husband at all, for it was written from Chicago, while he is in Buffalo. It was addressed to my name, but it couldn't have been for me."

"The clerk received the letter and carefully scanned the envelope, and she handed him a dollar with the remark:

"Put it in the letter, sir, and write on the envelope: "Opened by mistake—dreadful mistake—but the opener won't give it away. If you can think of anything else to soothe the poor woman, put it on, too."

"Yes, I will."

"For I know exactly how she'll feel about it, and I know if my husband should tell me to bangle my old head off and jingle around I wouldn't have any one know it for a million dollars. Dear me! but I'm so sorry, and it was such a mistake—dreadful mistake!"—Detroit Free Press.

Juvenile Mortality.

Of 1,000,000 children ushered into life nearly 150,000 pass away by the end of the first year. Twelve months later 53,000 more will have followed. At the end of the third year the number living will be diminished by 28,000 more. Each year of the decade following will make its inroads upon the ranks, but less serious in amount, till the thirteenth year will call for less than 4,000. Those remaining will fall out by twos and threes till the end of the forty-fifth year, when it will be found that in the intervening period almost 500,000 have succumbed to the hardships of the way. At the end of sixty years 370,000 gray-haired veterans would still be keeping step with the duties of the passing days. Eighty years would see 37,000 remaining, with strength impaired and steps growing feeble. At the end of ninety-five years but 22 would linger in the darkening path, and those would be rapidly thinned till in the 108th year the last survivor of the million would disappear, and join the ranks of his predecessors in the great host of the majority.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 150,000 papers a day.

The magnificent and unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.

From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 25,878 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 1-cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that its reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a cheap paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, cure rents would still be keeping step with the duties of the passing days. Eighty years would see 37,000 remaining, with strength impaired and steps growing feeble. At the end of ninety-five years but 22 would linger in the darkening path, and those would be rapidly thinned till in the 108th year the last survivor of the million would disappear, and join the ranks of his predecessors in the great host of the majority.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The JOURNAL carries no complimentaries or exchanges that are not as much a part of a bona-fide circulation as if paid in cash at our own office. The Sentinel's estimate of our gross circulation is too low. If you want to make a fight on circulation, print your figures.

"The Sentinel does not depend upon any other paper for its main supply of local matter." True enough; but it does make haste to copy nearly every new feature introduced in the JOURNAL. However, we should not kick; it is rather a compliment to our ideas of a newspaper to have them copied.

The route of the Thomas Friant this season gives excellent accommodation to those desiring to visit this place on business or pleasure, and will bring more people here than would be possible under the old order of things. For this reason, if for no other, the boat should receive a liberal patronage.

C. N. Shaw, of Petoskey, has patented a "refrigerater" that is going to revolutionize the meat business. He can hold a temperature of 32 degrees when the thermometer stands at 70 or 80 outside, and can freeze meat solid by the use of salt. He has built a mammoth one in his meat market that will hold 44 tons of meat.

In another column will be found the advertisement of the Chicago Daily News. The News is not the largest paper in Chicago, but it is a compact eight column folio, containing all the important news in condensed form, with spicy editorials on leading topics. The News is well printed, and its popularity is best attested by its daily average circulation of nearly 135,000 copies.

It is said that twenty years of study will post a man pretty thoroughly in the habits and history of fresh water fish; but when the scientific man goes after trout in the twenty-first year, he won't get as big a string as a freckled faced boy with a pole cut with his jack knife and a twine line will bring in on a day when it is too rainy to go to school and just rainy enough to go a-fishing.

Mr. H. B. Chapman is the owner of a beautiful hotel, which cost $30,000, at Bay Springs, a delightful summer resort of Charlevoix county, and which, he thinks, would be a very desirable place for the soldiers' home. He would offer special inducements to the committee to buy the property. If the home goes to northern Michigan there would probably be no better point for its location, and it would be well for the committee to give due consideration to Mr. Chapman's propositions.—News.

Gentle spring in this latitude is usually a trying season of the year to any but the strongest and healthiest specimens of humanity. Bills of mortality, as well as doctors' and druggist's bills, begin to swell long before the buds do, and the "merrie month of May" is not seldom saddened by the deathbed invalids who have struggled and hoped on through the snows and frosts of winter. Much of this is, of course, unavoidable. Aside from the annually recurring evils of "moving" with all its attendant discomforts, the thrifty housewife too often prematurely abolishes the furnace or other heating arrangements which have kept halls and passages comfortable during the winter. Heavy underclothing is frequently laid aside too soon, and there is undue haste to don the lighter wear that tradition and the fashion plate call seasonable. Rather bear the temporary discomfort of clothing a trifle too warm than tempt the ills that may come with a spring suit. Keep the fires going even though—better if—doors and windows must be kept open in consequence.

When a death, marriage or birth occurs in one's family he always likes to see a mention of it in his local paper. When his folks are visiting or visited he expects to see it in print. But when by sending to some large city he can get printing done a little cheaper he frequently overlooks the fact that his home paper is employing hands and paying them money to trade at his store, paying taxes to support his village, and keeping the country around informed that the home market is the place to buy and sell, and he ignores home efforts and for a few paltry cents sends to a large city where a press run by steam and fed by a 35 cent boy makes his note heads, letter heads, statements, etc. Such enterprise is what keeps a town alive. "In a horn."

It ought to force the printer to otherwise toged his groceries, clothing, etc., where he can get them cheaper, but it don't.—Leslie Local.

East Jordan.

The boats running regularly again and vessels loading at our docks, revive the activity of our people to their oldtime vigor, and never in the history of East Jordan has there been so many transfers of real estate at prices which prove at once, the growth is to be something more than a flighty and excitable jump at future and uncertain prospects.

RUSSIA AND INDIA.

Comprehensive Account of the Russian Advance in Central Asia, by Eugene Schuyler.

England Under the Necessity of Insisting Upon a Delineation of the Afghan Boundary.

A Map Showing the Seat of the Threatened War and the Contiguous Country.

Mr. Eugene Schuyler, late United States Minister to Turkey—than whom no man in America, probably, is better posted in European politics—contributes to the Chicago Times a valuable and interesting paper upon the Anglo-Russian dispute, the main portion of which we reproduce below. It will well repay perusal:

At a moment when peace and war seem to hang on the balance, it is natural to inquire what are the exact causes of the difficulties about the Afridi. What is England's object in the Afghan country, and what is Russia's? Why does she desire her own extension there? Why is it a question of peace or war? Is any particular benefit to result?

In the first place, it is useless to answer indirectly by specific questions. The question is a general one, and the answer must be a general one. The present dispute over the Penjdeh affair.

The attack on Penjdeh has been heralded by many threats. It was not a sudden blow. It was the conclusion of a series of movements which had been going on for years. The Russians had occupied the Akhal Tekke country, whose Asiatic name is Turkmenia, without much opposition, and not even make up mind whether they purposed occupying the present oasis of Merv, although the whole of the Russian movement seemed directed to its acquisition and control. Then, after a delay of nearly thirty years, a continued advance was resumed in the direction of Merv. A number of officers and others, desirous of seeing the country, joined the expedition, which started from Kizil Arvat, and, with little opposition, reached Merv. Then, after a short delay, a regular occupation was effected, and the Russians began to establish themselves in the country. Roads were made, and a railway was commenced from Kizil Arvat to Merv. The Russians have also established themselves at Kushk, on the road to Herat, and have pushed their outposts to the Afghan frontier and to the Oxus. The English had at last given up their fears that Russia might advance through Bashgar or the mountain passes of the Himalayas, and, owning to their own defects and bad fortune, had become convinced that it would be difficult for the Russians to attack India by the way of Cabul; but Herat once occupied, the road would be easy, and successful invasions of India, having come from the Afghan frontier. The Russians, in reply to England's questions, had already proposed a commission for the purpose of settling the boundaries of Afghanistan, which the English had refused, fearing lest by a reopening into they would implicitly agree to Russian occupation up to Merv and Sir Alt. For the sake of convenience, however, the Russians consented to recognize as Afghan certain provinces which had not been in the effective possession of those two sovereigns, in order that the boundary line might be drawn on the river Oxus or Amou-Darya. This line terminated on the river at a place called Hodja Salah, and was to go from there westward to the Persian frontier, the exact line not being specified.

Matters remained for nearly ten years in that condition. The English protested, it is true, against the Russian occupation of Khiva, although Russian troops confined themselves to the right bank of the Oxus in their permanent occupations. They protested, also, against the occupation of Merv in 1881. Some even went so far as to advise sending money and ammunition to the Turcomans in order to enable them to oppose the Russians. The occupation of Merv and the neighboring provinces brought the Russians for the first time close to the Afghan frontier and to Herat, always considered the key to India. The English had at last given up their fears that Russia might advance through Bashgar or the mountain passes of the Himalayas, and owing to their own defects and bad fortune had become convinced that it would be difficult for the Russians to attack India by the way of Cabul; but Herat once occupied, the road would be easy, and successful invasions of India having come from the Afghan frontier. They protested, also, against the occupation of Merv in 1881. Some even went so far as to advise sending money and ammunition to the Turcomans in order to enable them to oppose the Russians. The occupation of Merv and the neighboring provinces brought the Russians for the first time close to the Afghan frontier and to Herat, always considered the key to India. The English had at last given up their fears that Russia might advance through Bashgar or the mountain passes of the Himalayas, and owing to their own defects and bad fortune had become convinced that it would be difficult for the Russians to attack India by the way of Cabul; but Herat once occupied, the road would be easy, and successful invasions of India having come from the Afghan frontier. The Russians, in reply to England's questions, had already proposed a commission for the purpose of settling the boundaries of Afghanistan, which the English had refused, fearing lest by a reopening into they would implicitly agree to Russian occupation up to degree, leaving the university early; he entered upon public life as Lord-in-Waiting to Lord J. Russell's first administration. He was attached in 1855 to Lord J. Russell's mission to Vienna, and was afterward Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Lord Palmerston's British Commissioner to Syria in 1860. He was Under Secretary of State for India from 1864 to 1866, and in the war office subsequently for a few months. Then, when we remember that the size of India is equal to three-quarters of all Russia in Europe, that its population amounts to 25,000,000, and that its debt, which would have to be assumed by Russia in case of annexation, is over $1,000,000,000, and that it pays a handsome revenue for her treasury, we can understand that Russia thought the frontier line should be drawn somewhat more favorably to the interests of the army of the possibility of such a move. It had never been seriously considered; but it was then felt that it was necessary to be in a position to oppose England in case of need, of war, which was not impossible, but unfortunate, whenever it became necessary to make another movement in Central Asia. Because the Russians to-day are not in a position to send vessels, or to threaten, and must therefore pay attention to England, it would not be equally possible for her to threaten India by the possibility of intriguing with England's enemies in India, and thus relieve of the army of the possibility of such a move. Temperate Drinking.

At a certain town meeting in Pennsylvania, the question came up whether any persons should be licensed to sell rum. The clergyman, the deacon, the physician, strange it may now appear, all favored it. One man only spoke against it, because of the mischief it did. The question was about to be put, when there arose from one corner of the room a miserable woman. She was thinly clad, and her appearance indicated the utmost wretchedness, and that her mortal career was almost closed. After a moment's silence, and all eyes being fixed upon her, she stretched her attenuated body to its utmost height, and then her long arms to their greatest length, and raising her voice to a shrill pitch, she called on all to look upon her.

"Yes!" she said, "look upon me, and then hear me. All that the last speaker has said relative to temperate drinking, as being the father of drunkenness, is true. All practice, all experience, declares its truth. All drinking of alcoholic poison, as a beverage in health, is excess. Look upon me! You all know me, or once did. You all know I was once the mistress of the best farm in the town; you all know, too, I had one of the best—the most devoted—of husbands. You all know I had fine, noble hearted, industrious boys. Where are they now? Doctor, where are they now? You all know they lie in a row, side by side, in yonder church-yard; all—every one of them filling the drunkard's grave! They were all led to believe that temperate drinking was safe—that excess alone ought to be avoided; and they never acknowleged excess. They quoted you, and you, and you (pointing with her shred of a finger to the minister, deacon and doctor as authority.) They thought themselves safe under such teachers. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and its prospects with horror. I felt we were to be over whelmed in one common ruin. I tried to ward off the blow; I tried to break the spell, the delusive spell, in which the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons. I begged, I prayed; but the odds were against me.

"The minister said the poison that was destroying my husband and boys was a good creature of God; the deacon who sits under the pulpit there and took our farm to pay his rum bills, sold them the poison; the doctor said a little was good, and the excess only ought to be avoided. My poor husband and my dear boys fell into the snare; and they could not escape; and, one after another, were conveyed to the sorrowful grave of the drunkard. Now look at me again. You probably see me for the last time. My sands have almost run. I have dragged my exhausted frame from my present home—your poor-house—to warn you all; to warn you, deacon! to warn you, false teachers of God's Word!" And with her arms flung high and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch, she exclaimed: "I shall soon stand before the judgment seat of God. I shall meet you there, you false guides, and be a witness against you all!"

The miserable woman vanished. A dead silence pervaded the assembly; the minister, the deacon and physician hung their heads; and when the President of the meeting put the question "Shall any licenses be granted for the sale of spirituous liquors?" the unanimous response was: "No!"—[Memoir of George N. Briggs, late ex Governor of Massachusetts.

Temperance includes the timely use of that which is to used, and the timely letting alone of that which is to be let alone. Temperance always involves total abstinence from some things. It is sheer nonsense to claim, as some do, that temperance implies the actual use of everything in moderation; that to be temperate one must indulge moderately in strycinine and laudanum and whisky and wine and turpentine.—H. Clay Trumble.

Build up the Country.

The Petoskey Record mentions at some length the organization of the Charlevoix Improvement Association, and spurs up their own society to do something, closing with the following valuable suggestion:

As supplementary to our article urging a reorganization of our business men's association, we call attention to a recent issue of the Grand Rapids Democrat wherein the statement is made that over 4,000 emigrants from Canada were landed in Port Huron, between October and January, all bound for the Huron peninsula. Four years ago we drove all over the counties of Huron and Sanilac and found the interior between the shores of Lake Huron and Saginaw to contain immense tracts of unimproved land. To-day the greater portion of those lands are occupied by a lowly class of emigrants with sufficient means to open up and improve their farms. How does it come? The question is peculiarly pertinent to Cheboygan, Petoskey and Charlevoix, all of which are away ahead of the country on account of the immense acreage of wild land in the three counties. The tide of emigration was turned toward the Huron peninsula by the concerted action of the shore towns; Lexington, Port Sanilac, Sand Beach, Grindstone City, Port Austin, Caseville and Sebewaing, and the county seat—22nd Ave. These villages contributed to a general fund for advertising purposes, and in immense edition of an advertising sheet was published setting forth the advantages of the peninsula, and illustrated with fine views of the villages, public building, large business blocks, and private residences. The enterprise received a generous boom from all the papers in the state, and many thousands of their advertising sheets were scattered in Canada. It cost several hundred dollars but is paying an enormous return on the investment to every town on the peninsula. Why not do that same thing here?

Let us get our business men's associations in working order, enter into cordial arrangements with our neighbors and give Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties a boom this year.

Heavy Losses by Fire.

Last week northern Michigan was again scourged by fire, and Charlevoix county came in for a full share. On all sides of Pine Lake, and especially bordering on the south and east, the flames raged furiously, destroying many thousand cords of wood, besides fences, farm buildings, houses, etc.

Among the losers are the following: W. S. Stripp, 5,000 cords shipping wood, and 3,000 cords furnace wood.

Pine Lake Iron Co., 3,500 cords furnace wood.

Henry Perry lost a quantity of wood and his house and barn, saving nothing but the clothes on his back.

Five other families were burned out, whose names we have not learned.

Blakeley's school house, near Eastport, was burned, and in Banks the fire raged unchecked near to Gaylea's & Nash's mill, but was checked in time to prevent serious loss.

Fine Specimen.

Fine caught in the mouth of the house occupied by Archie Lewis, on the north side of Pine Lake, on the north side, last Saturday, but was extinguished without serious damage.

The owner is on Shanty of Norwood, and A. B. Struthers, of Hayes, burned last Saturday.

Fires raged in the woods north and south of us last Saturday.

Clean Yards.

D. Sherwood is putting a large amount of work on his lot and front yard, and when his house is built he will have a very pretty place. Although it is now surrounded by a wire fence, a hedge has been started, which will, in time, add much to the beauty of the lot. Every nook and corner in his garden receives the same careful attention.

Mrs. Squmlberry is having her front yard graded this week. A large three story dower bed is built directly in front of the house, with a large letter S next to the street. The beds are raised six or eight inches, with cobble stone border to hold the earth in place. When the sod is well started, and the flowers are in bloom, she will have a very pretty place.

This is labor requiring artistic taste and skill, and adds immensely to the beauty of the town and the value of the property. We shall probably have occasion to refer to others during the course of the season.

Improvements at Boyne.

Lewis hall, Boyne, is occupied regularly by three societies, with more coming in the immediate future. It is fitted up with stage and other conveniences for small traveling shows, as well as conventions, etc.

A. J. Beardsley is building a two story brick block adjoining the Lewis block, Boyne, to be occupied below by a stock of boots, shoes and dry goods, and the upper story to be fitted up for offices.

On the south of the Lewis block, Lewis & Beardsley expect to build another two-story brick, making altogether a very substantial block of stores.

The Statesman recommends sowing wild rice around our lakes, to encourage the growth of ducks.

A Lodge of Knights of Labor was organized at Boyne Monday evening, with 33 members.

Phil. Barbour has added a new Peerless job press, 10x15, to his job printing outfit.

Serious Shooting.

One day this week, while entertaining some friends shooting at a mark with a revolver, Dan Jerrue, of East Jordan, received a bullet in his left breast which has prostrated him, and some fears are expressed that it may prove fatal. He was some distance from the tree on which the mark was placed, and various theories are expressed as to the true cause, some appearing to believe that the ball struck something and glanced, while others claim that he must have received the ball direct from the revolver. On making an examination, the physicians failed to find the bullet.

Council Proceedings.

A committee was appointed at the council last Thursday to establish a dock line on Round Lake.

A cistern with a capacity of 500 barrels, to be walled with stone, was ordered built on the ground adjoining the village hall.

An ordinance was adopted prohibiting the running at large of horses and mules in the village.

Burgess.

The wife of Chauncy Howe, Jr., of Hayes, was burned in the Charlevoix cemetery last Thursday. She leaves a baby about four months old.

Alex Ross lost a horse last week.

Supervisor Burgess is taking the assessment and his sole work is idle. It will resume again in a few days.

New Grocery.

Cooper Bros., Oliver and James are this week fitting up the rooms in the opera block formerly occupied by W. J. Orser, anodyne and will open out with a full stock of groceries, provisions, etc. They will confine themselves to this line of goods, and will no doubt receive a fair proportion of the trade.

Certificates Granted.

The following persons were granted third grade certificates at the late examination: Isaac Vance, Carrie Porter, and Herbert J. Whelan, of East Jordan; Will Pearson, Spencerville, and Nellie M. Barnett, of Carpenter; James C. Bryant, of Boyne Falls, second grade.

In the window of a Cincinnati saloon is a stuffed rattlesnake coiled up in a whiskey jug and secured in bonds. Could the saloon keepers show a set more where votes can be controlled by our judiciously admiring crowd before an election, this would be coming safely by estimate at having a telling power equal to that of citizens engaged in other kinds of trade. The lawyer makes policies as much a part of his business as he does the purchase of logs and mill-privileges or real estate titles for them, while the other kind of critter is merely winked at. It is not a power as to the danger to the bonds of our country. Let the most reputable lawyers be disbarred from engaging as such, and it would be something unbearable.—Toledo Blade.

Strong wheat is selling at 99 cents per bushel, while patent flour sells at 50 per barrel. A farmer who deals in these articles says that it takes four bushels of wheat to make one barrel of flour, while the old plan for the milling. The second make of flour is of spring wheat that is now bringing at 80 cent to the miller per 47lbs. The question is, to whom does this profit of 82,000 or more go? Does it serve to help out the prices of the plated ware concern, that is a foreign invention with which Pennsylvania is flooded? Or is it in the discovery before it was brought to the steel stage. As the ore manufacturing the metal of the flour itself is made in China people should cheaper in England than in the United [illegible] Chicago News.

Lord Beaconsfield used to lift his jeweled finger and point across the Atlantic and say: "No American city is well governed." I believe that is true of our twelve largest cities now, each having more than 200,000 inhabitants: Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, here on the Atlantic slope; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans in the Mississippi valley, and San Francisco on the Pacific slope. It is very nearly true of Pittsburg, Buffalo, Toledo and Detroit, which are just under 200,000. It is becoming true of cities of the size of Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, New Haven, Albany. Into what are we drifting when nearly a quarter of our population live in great cities, and when municipal government is a hissing and a byword with us already? You must spoil the whiskey rings of their political power, or they will not only corrupt your homes but undermine the possibility of safe government under universal suffrage in great cities.—Joseph Cook.

Indispensable Requisites for Success.

P. T. Barnum writes as follows of a subject of which he is fully competent to speak:

Whatever you do, do it with all your might. Work at it early and late, in season and out of season, not leaving a stone unturned, and never deferring for an hour that which can as well be done now. The old proverb is full of truth and meaning, «whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well." Many a man acquires a fortune by doing his business thoroughly, while his neighbor remains poor for life, because he only half does his. Ambition, energy, industry and perseverance are indispensable requisites for success in business.

THE TAX LAW.

Recent Opinions of the Supreme Justices Given in Full.

A Matter of Great Interest and Importance to the People.

How the Judges Are Divided on the Constitutionality

The opinions of the Justices of the Supreme Court in the matter of the Wayne County taxes are printed below. The Supreme Court heard en the matter in the decree of Judge Chambers, of the Wayne Circuit, was affirmed. The action of the court is of great interest and importance, not only to Wayne County but throughout the State. The opinions of the Justices are as follows:

JUSTICE COOLEY.

When the case of the Iron Cliffs Company was decided I assented unwarrantably, it seems to me that the judgment, though rendered by a divided court, would be accepted by the Circuit Judges as law, and followed by this court as a precedent until it should be overruled by a majority of this court. I have always supposed that was the proper course, and it seemed to me a course necessary to be established and only by administration of justice that it never would have occurred to me that any other could be taken. Such a division of the court is liable to occur at any time; and there are so many cases which, by reason of interest, consanguinity, or former connection with the controversy, otherwise one Judge is disqualified from sitting, that there would be constant liability of an equal division if the court consisted of an even number. It, therefore, seems to me unfortunate may be the case likely a Circuit Judge became led under the impression, as we have and can have no settled law for the State at large, and each Circuit Judge will determine for himself, and conclusively what shall be the law for his circuit, and how make it different from the law of the adjoining circuit. This would, in short, result in practical anarchy. I have never considered it my duty to present it by yielding my own opinion when the same question should come up again in my circuit, should be essential to my self-respect or consistency. There has been but three occasions during my super or opposed to court months in a Judge yielding his opinion when a majority of conservation of unity requires it, is one I do not quite understand. Judges are certainly during fluctuate every day; it would be a great mistake to assume that every judgment in which a court happens expressed is all respects the views of every concurring Judge.

In this particular case the reasons for abiding on the first occasion are peculiarly strong. In some these cases substantially the same. The State proceeds in each only to enforce the lien for tax or sale; if one proceeding has been arrested for technical cause, the plaintiff have been free but for reasons of convenience. The question of tax ascertaining and imposing the proper amount is not involved, but which has always been in the ordinary practice of the Commissioners that principle, the reader, seems to me to be attached the only ground for decision in this case.

Essentially little can have this case should be doubted, but it seems to me that on every ground considered the court would do wrong in this persons that these decisions are conclusive between others who are not parties to the proceedings of mind. Mr own views or the proper attorney does I have been legislative mind authority do not permit or no concurring.

I decline in the premises.

CHRISTIANCY, J.

As I stated my reasons for holding the proceedings under the tax law of 1885 void, and the law itself invalid in the case of Iron Cliffs Mining Company vs. The Sheriff of Michigan, I do not deem it necessary upon the present motion to express my opinion upon the other questions, which, however important and interesting in themselves, can not affect the present case. The argument, even on the minor constitutional questions, has not shown a mistake in assuming the propriety of declaring laws unconstitutional only when there is any serious distrust or opinion in favor of supporting the constitution and nothing else, and no one duty to support the laws cannot, therefore, depend on their conformity to the constitution, which, I contend, all this is for the Legislature, but dependence, and any Judge be guilty of upon to neglect or abandon the right or duty to decide such an issue on his official responsibility he is satisfied they should be declared. Whatever care is required of him in forming his conclusion, he is bound to act upon when he is formed.

I am not inclined that any of the questions reserved can be decided in my own. The division of opinion is upon the question whether the law is valid and I should dissent more or less clearly in all. Such a question is important. Now are that law as it were before the beginning of the Government by every Legislature, and cannot be examined as plainly, and by any one, decided, which expressly confirms the individual's power to correct which or designated and unless such department to exercise. Sometimes the others except in the case of this named cases, courts cannot be some extraordinary And it is conceivable as to put ourselves in the way of judicial decision it may be the process of law, which, being applied to courts, compels them to confine their action to cases where the methods conform to the established principles of jurisprudence. I have recently given my reasons for the belief that the proceeding is not due process of law, and I mention one method. If the judgment law is held not conclusive, then it is law as no judgment at all, and leaves the court precisely where the Auditor General was left before. Under such a clear object of the change. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in reference to the Iron Cliffs Company is a judicial body until its judgments were made void as an illustration of the principle.

As parties are both sides, in the to meet controversies and to bind, not only the parties to the Legislature to confer Commissioners to make such laws. I did not think that the statute now decides the question, as it had been thought to do at the time a decision which I have questioned, and more likely to be. The question may be that it is law, and the law providing for the organization, whether Commissioners can be allowed to intervene in the actual work of taxation that they have done so, or the Supreme Court and must be forbidden to do so. I have been forced to allow before for and the Commissioners to be assessed in support of the assessment of the State, which indicates, or that they have been legislative authority to do so, pursuant to my concurring.

I decline in the premises.

The Constitution of the State contains certain provisions which are applicable to the cases made in the bill of complaint, and the Legislature of the State has made certain enactments which purport to be in pursuance of those provisions. The legislative acts of this State are void if they are in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to declare them void for that reason. But the Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction to declare void the acts of the Legislature of this State for any other reason. The

STRONG DRINK.

I've canvassed the city and country,
And visited mountain and dale;
I've stood by the side of the drunkard,
And heard the poor maniac's wail;
I've seen him fall down in the gutter,
I've lifted him out of the street,
I've seen him hung up by the halter,
His last and most terrible feat.

The notion that rum is a blessing,
True temperance people abhor;
Strong drink is a curse to our nation,
And sorry to be dreaded than war.
The victims of lager and whiskey,
Tobacco, old cider and wine,
Are vastly beyond computation,
And cannot be brought into line.

Old Bourbon is man's panacea,
It tingers the head and the cold,
It gets like a charm on depression,
And makes a man cheery and bold.
A man when disordered by whiskey
Is strongly inlated with zeal,
He'll bless you, he'll curse you, or kill you,
Just as he may happen to feel.

Intemperance peoples our prisons,
Imposes great burdens to bear;
It turns quit homes into riches
And drives many souls to despair.
It makes a man haughtiness and wicked,
And keeps him away from the Lord;
His footsteps are tending to Hades,
Adown to his fearful reward.

Oh, parents, look well to your children
And show them the follies of youth,
Direct them to shun every falsehood,
And point them to honor the truth.
The serpent is coiled at your threshold,
All ready to do you or your joy,
And soon the sad will may escape you,
The cobra has bitten my boy.

What moments this angry communion?
This resolute warlike array?
It points us to free-dommer rule,
Which over the people shall say.
Come out from your old lobby places
And work with a different hand,
Step square to the front with your colors,
And march with the temperance band.

Better Than a Fortune.

"So you are the young lady that's teaching my children not to taste of cider, beer, or wine?" asked William Benson, a notorious hard drinker, as he met the village school ma'am on the way to her boarding place.

"Exactly," replied Mrs. Elton, a fragile little blonde, "and I wish I could not only teach the children how pernicious and wrong the practice is, but also the older people."

"Wrong to drink wine, is it? Then you've got ahead of St. Paul. He ordered Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake, and other infirmities. What do you say to that, Mrs. Elton?" "Says," responded the latter; "why, I wouldn't object to wineas Paul recommends it, myself."

"You wouldn't, hey? Well, where's the difference?—wine is wine; you can't deny that."

"But, Mr. Benson, there is all the difference in the world between ancient and modern wine. One is the purejuice of the grape, drank as soon as expressed; the other, even when not doctored with chemicals, is kept for months and rotting till all its virtues are destroyed. You wouldn't drink of rotten apples or potatoes, why should you of rotten sugar—for that's just what alcohol is."

"Pshaw! now you temperance folks are shrewd; but how do you know bible wine isn't rotted sugar, as you call it? You can't prove that it is not just like ours."

"Yes I can, and by the bible, too. We read in the old testament of the embezzler taking the cup in hand, pressing the grapes into the cup, and give it immediately to Pharaoh. The Egyptians drank no fermented wine, because they thought it produced an evil spirit, but they did not object to the juice of the grape, taken as soon as expressed."

After a few more questions by Benson, and a few exhortations by Mrs. Elton, the former slowly wended his way homeward, muttering, "Well, well, it may be as she says. Anyhow, I'll not object to her teaching the children. Wish somebody had explained it to me when I was a boy 'twould have been better than a fortune."

A man very much intoxicated was taken to the station house. Why did you not bail him out? inquired a by-stander of a friend. "Bake him out?" exclaimed the other. "Why he couldn't pump him out."

Three-fourths of the "drunks" in police courts are drunk on beer.—Cincinnati Commercial.

On motion of Mr. Heasley, the claim was referred to the committee on claims.

The special committee to canvass the votes on county seat removal reported the votes in detail by townships (the same as heretofore published in the Journal); also recommending that the returns of Bear Lake, Boyne Valley, Eveline, Resort, and Springvale be referred back for correction and completion on account of informalities and irregularities. The report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Ward, a committee of three was appointed to report on rewriting the index of mortgages. The chair appointed Messrs Upright, Jersey, and Harris.

Mr. Kent offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Whereas, At the recent election, upon the question of the removal of the county seat, the question, although as yet undetermined, seems to have carried in favor of such removal.

Therefore it is Resolved, that a committee be appointed to proceed to South Arm and ascertain what buildings can be procured for offices and court room, and that the register of deeds and county clerk be requested to accompany such committee, and to give such information and advice as they may deem advisable in regard to the requirements of their respective offices, and that the said committee ascertain what arrangement can be made for the removal of the records and property, and report upon these matters at the next meeting of this board.

The chair appointed Messrs. Kent, Jersey, and Heasley.

The clerk was instructed to notify the clerks of the townships of Bear Lake, Boyne Valley, Eveline, and Resort, to send in amended returns relative to removal of county seat, together with certificates of inspectors, such returns to be made before June 10th.

Trout Fishers, Take Notice.

D. D. Hughes, a well known Grand Rapids attorney, will doubtless take a trip line along with him the next time he whips a Kalkaska county stream for trout. He brought in a goodly number of the speckled beauties one day this week, some of which were as large as sardines, but most of them little fellows that fell far below the six-inch standard required by law. John H. Fink, a traveling man, and also an enthusiastic sportsman, became indignant over such wholesale slaughter of infant fish, and entered a complaint against Mr. Hughes, and had him brought before Esq. Ramsey, who fined him $10.00. Without doubt the above law is often violated, and perhaps this example made of a prominent attorney will cause people to remember that the law forbids you to keep, after catching, brook trout less than six inches in length. Francis states that he found her dead, and being unable to give the lady Christian burial had decided to throw it in the river, and was carrying out his purpose when arrested by a policeman. It is known that the couple quarreled frequently, and that recently he beat her in a brutal manner. The body of the woman was covered with blows, and marks of fingers still were on her throat.

Great destruction has been wrought by forest fires in a section of Wisconsin. In Brown County the villages at Duck Creek, Mill Center, Hinsville and Little Suamico all suffered severely. All through the three counties of Brown, Oconto, and Shawano the damage to growing timber, both pine and hardwood, and to the fencing of farms, has been great. Much property has been destroyed in the shape of piles of wood, posts, ties, and poles, and many farms are left unprotected against trespassing cattle, just as the planting season is at hand. Forest fires destroyed the town of Granville, Mich., with a large amount of lumber, leaving twenty-five families homeless. Sawyer's mill, at Polar Lake, and $40,000 worth of lumber, belonging to W. B. Nelson, were burned. A loss of $100,000 is the result of a conflagration at Paoli, Ind., which nearly destroyed the town. A story comes from Key West, Fla., of the wholesale kidnaping of United States citizens by a railroad company in Guatemala. Sixty-seven men were enticed aboard a vessel in September last, at New Orleans, and taken to Puerto Barrios, Guatemala, where they were put to work on a railway. One of the victims escaped in January, and has just landed in this country. He reports that several hundred men were entrapped in a similar manner and taken to Central America. The work was slavery, and the men died like sheep.

A dreadful triple tragedy is reported from Paris, Texas. Samuel P. Holmes, a wealthy farmer, described as a large, powerful man, 50 years, and possessed of a violent temper, entered the residence of his wife, from whom he had been some months separated. He immediately began a murderous attack upon her with a hoe-handle. She was alone in the room when attacked, but defended herself bravely, the while screaming lustily for help. Her sister, Mrs. W. J. Tighe, and Prof. J. W. Youmans hastened to her assistance. As Prof. Youmans entered the room Holmes sprang from the prostrate body of his wife and attacked him, stabbing him several times, killing him instantly. The murderer then turned upon his sister-in-law, Mrs. Tighe, and threw his knife into her neck, and chest, and arms, inflicting horrible wounds, from which she died in a short time.

Secretary of the Interior Lamar has appointed the following named persons as special agents of the Bureau of Labor:

Charles B. Judd, of Colorado; Jonas Libby, of New York; Elgin L. L. Gould, of Maryland; Henry C. Wilson, of New Jersey; William H. Stinson, of New Hampshire; James Reed, of Massachusetts; Arthur B. Woolford, of Connecticut; J. H. Groves, of Delaware; B. L. Hanson, of Pennsylvania; Gregor Fox, of Pennsylvania; Frank E. Gilliam, of Ohio; William A. Mandley, of Ohio; Ellezgld W. Browning, of Maryland; William C. Tremlain, of South Carolina; Henry Hall, of Missouri; Henry Jones, of Georgia; Silenus O. Ward, of New York.

It is learned that in making these appointments the Secretary acted without regard to the party affiliations of the persons to be appointed, and they were selected without respect to any theories they might entertain upon economic questions. The districts to which these appointees are to be assigned have not yet been fully determined.

Several days ago a delegation from the Order of Good Templars of the District of Columbia called on the President and left with him a written petition asking that he make diligent inquiry as to the personal habits and associations of the persons he should appoint to office as Police Judge of the District, and to the latter the President said:

I read your address the last night with great interest. It is something tangible, and if I should come to the end of my term my labor would be greatly lessened. The temperance people are good people and should have a say. Before the last New York I determined to save the District a good conveyancer, but there were many conflicting claims and I am sorry I appointed so many friends. Five minutes at a time to know what to do. But you come with clear statements, of which I will take further notice.

Washington telegram: "The failure of the Dolphin to open up an old Government contractor, will be a very serious matter to John Roach, for it will mean his permanent retirement from the shipbuilding trade, but there is a rule applying to all kinds of Government work, providing that where a man has once failed to fulfill a contract he is barred from ever receiving another contract. The Government keeps a roll of what are called the 'failing contractors,' and it is useless for one of these to bid on Government work unless the fact that he is on the list should happen to be overlooked."

On the one hundred and twentieth ballot, after a contest lasting four months, the Illinois Legislature elected Hon. John A. Logan as his own successor in the Senate of the United States. Every member of the Legislature was present. The democrats declined to answer the call, and the Republicans quickly recorded 101 votes for their candidate. Representative Sittig making a protest. When the absentees were called every Democrat voted for Lambert Tree. Some of them were their votes to Charles B. Farwell, but no Republican followed suit. At the end of two hours the Speaker announced the election of Gen. Logan, the votes having been recorded for Lambert Tree. Senator Logan received dispatches from Republican friends in all parts of the country congratulating him upon his victory; some of them conveying the prediction that he would be the next Republican nominee for President. When President Cleveland was informed of Senator Logan's election he expressed no surprise. It is said that the President has derived from the first no little pleasure in not interfering in a struggle in which the prosperity of his participation was questionable, and which to never regarded as likely to result in victory.

Frank H. Pierce, of New Hampshire, has been appointed Consul at Matanzas, vice David Vickers, suspended.

The military have made vigorous preparations to receive the redskins. Big Bear's and Poundmaker's bands will number two thousand Indians, well armed, and fully provisioned. There are half-breeds with the Indians."

A Quebec dispatch says: "Riel's capture and fate continue to occupy all minds here, and little else is talked of in public or private. The French canadians, to a man, say that Riel was not to be hanged, and their organ, Le Canadien, is out in a strong article lavoring magnanimous treatment of the unfortunate man, and a new investigation to ascertain their grievances."

FOREIGN.

John Bright, in answer to a letter from an American friend asking if England would return to the policy of protection, writes as follows: "Not until the United States returns to slavery. England's present danger is from the protective policy. The Tories and Liberals are equally blamable for the lunatic policy of adding millions to the military expenditure while trade is depressed and the poor are badly housed."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

In a quarrel at New Straitsville, Ohio, Albert Guest shot Marshal Henry Auer fatally, another bullet from Guest's revolver mortally wounding a boy. The New York Medical Record of May 23, says under the caption, "The Condition of Gen. Grant":

During the past week Gen. Grant has been in a comparatively comfortable condition. He obtains his full amount of sleep, takes his nourishment without difficulty, and is quite free from pain. At the consultation of May 15, Drs. Sands, Shrady, and Douglas being present, it was found the swelling under the angle of the jaw on the right side had increased in size; that the glands were still indurated and deeply fixed; also that there was a tendency toward diffused infiltration into the adjoining tissues of the upper and anterior portions of the neck. There was consequently some rigidity of the jaws, preventing the wide opening of the mouth, thus in a measure interfering with his comfort in eating. The palatal curtain was somewhat swollen, but the instructive processes at the side of the uvula had not markedly extended. No change had been noted in the appearances of the right tonsilar regions, nor in those of the posterior part of the pharynx. The alteration on the right side of the base of the tongue showed a tendency to extend backward, was more excavated, and had a more decided ulcerated border. At the examination on Wednesday, made by Drs. Douglas and Shrady, the local conditions were found to be unchanged.

Secretary Cope, of the American Iron and Steel Association, in a review of the commercial situation, after alluding to the belief that a transfer of the Presidency from one political party to the other would create a commercial revulsion, says:

With the dread of the adoption of a reactionary policy by the new national administration happily dispelled, with the domestic market very largely in the hands of home producers, so that imports are executed in value by exports; with our currency on a gold basis, so the no unsettling of values to be apprehended soon from that quarter; with no political excitement distracting the minds of the people, and with a majority of members in the next House of Representatives believed to be in favor of protection, the manufacturer of iron and steel products are in a position to take instant advantage of any favorable change in the condition of business. How this change may be brought about we are unable to explain, but it may be very much nearer at hand than is now supposed.

A dispatch from Calcary, in the Northwest Territory, reports that Gen. Steele's advance guard, on its way to Fort Pitt, met the Indians and lost several men in killed and wounded. The force of the Hon. Mr. Dewdney, superintendent of Indian affairs, is also in the field, and it is believed that the trouble is spreading, and that all the Indians in the country will be in arms presently. Dewdney, who is a member of the Canadian cabinet, is an American citizen, having taken out naturalization papers in Montana, where he took part in the election of 1882, being, it is asserted, an active Republican worker.

President Cleveland has appointed R. M. T. Hunter Collector of Customs for the district of Tappahannock, Virginia. Five Democratic Senators were suspended from office for partisan work. Cleveland and His Sister.

When Miss Cleveland left Washington two weeks ago the harpies who have never ceased : snatch at an excuse for defaming the present chief magistrate, were quick to change that there had been a difference between brother and sister that rendered her retirement from the white house permanent. Miss Cleveland, it was said, had entered her brother's household with a clear mid express understanding that nothing in its conduct should transgress her well-known temperance principles. This alleged compact, it was said, he had broken by permitting the use of liquor at the white house on social occasions. Being a woman of determination as well as convictions, her withdrawal naturally followed his breach of faith. All this pretty piece of malicious gossip is now exploded by the announcement that Miss Cleveland, after taking a much needed rest, will return to Washington this week "and resume her duties as the 'first lady of the republic.' " All accounts from Washington agree that there appears to be the utmost confidence and cordiality between the president and his sister. They enjoy each the utmost liberty and independence of opinion upon various questions besides that of temperance, and each respects the convictions of the other. The strong bond of sympathy between them is their strong common sense. While Miss Cleveland is mistress of the white house there is no danger that its social life will offend the moral sense of the nation. In the reply of President Cleveland to an address from the Order of Good Templars of the District of Columbia, he shows that in his own way he is as sincere a friend of temperance as is his sister, who is an acknowledged leader in the cause. So far as close observers can discover the only danger from intemperance that threatens the white house during this administration is that of overwork. In conscientious devotion to the tasks set before them by their ideas of duty, the Clevelands appear to be brother and sister indeed—friends and rivals.–[Chicago Daily News.

The bill creating the county of Sumner was killed in the Senate last Thursday.

The latest republican prohibition law in Kansas, which clothed the county attorneys with unlimited power over witnesses and allowed them heavy fees of $25 on each count on the conviction of a beer or liquor seller, has been declared unconstitutional. The court decides that a law which gives a prosecuting officer judicial powers and compels him to run usual virulence of persecution by rewards for conviction is not only opposed to the constitution but to justice.–[Kalamazoo Gazette.

FINDING A SITUATION.

BY MANDA L. CHOCKER.

"That girl will have to go; she's old enough to earn her own living if she ever intends to. Of course, when her mother died I took her in, but that did not signify that I was going to keep her forever. I've done a good part by the thankless chit in the last ten years, and I've made up my mind not to be badgered with her any longer."

Mrs. Lucinda Maynard brushed back a few silvered hairs which had fallen unceremoniously into her face, and leaned back in her ample chair, watching furtively the countenance of her husband, who sat opposite her on the broad, chintz-covered lounge.

"I don't know, Lucinda; 'seems to me 'twould be kind o' hard to send her off in that manner at present. She is only sixteen this coming winter, and sort o' frail; so quiet and white-faced, you know," and the husband ended dispiritedly.

He had said his little say, feeling, that with his wife his words had but little weight; for ever since marriage had made them one, he had been aware that she was the one, and he and his views constituted a mere matrimonial cipher.

"Frail, fudge! Josiah Maynard; that's always your way of putting things. I am all but out of patience with you. Just as if I didn't know natural-born slowness and inherited laziness from disease. I am old enough to know that the grass will always have a chance to grow under Mag Lovell's feet, so you need not begin to hoist your charity sails in her behalf. No, sir. I've settled it to-day. There are our own to look after; Eleanor is to be fitted out for boarding-school, and Agnes must have the Steinway you promised her over a year ago; so counting up what we owe our own children, there isn't much to throw away on Mag Lovell, I can tell you."

"But she helps you in the kitchen and dairy a great deal, Lucinda, and I imagine you will miss her often; 'seems to me I should."

"Josh! I will not grieve, nor have to wait on her slow motions, either," and the callous-hearted woman indulged in a hard, rasping laugh as she folded her hands and rocked to and fro complacently.

Josiah Maynard heaved a deep sigh, and leaned back against the casement. He knew his broad acres and bountiful home were sufficient for the wants and fancies of all, and his pitying heart yearned toward the quiet orphaned niece who had grown like a pale flower from her babyhood under his roof. His heart ached at the prospect of seeing Margaret Lovell, his dead sister's child, thrust out on the charities of an unkind world. He shut his eyes and gave himself up to certain plans concerning Margaret.

The door opening out on the piazza was ajar, and, had Lucinda Maynard noticed it, she might have seen a scared white face and wild eyes, just visible in the gathering twilight; while with bated breath Margaret Lovell caught every word of the conversation between her uncle and uncle.

Margaret was on the point of entering when the first sentence allowed to fall, during in its effect on her ear; then she drew back and remained motionless until the cruel closing sentence had gone to her heart like a knife; and then, retracing her steps stealthily, she disappeared in the shadows.

The evening wind blew coldly from the gates of the sunset across the autumn-scarred fields, and moaned around the gables of the Maynard homestead, and the desolate-hearted girl shivered and walked away. She did not wish to go in now; she was not wanted. No; Aunt Lucinda said she "must go." Where should she go? She did not know, and wondered in a vague, frightened way what it all meant.

Uncle Josiah went out shortly afterward to find Margaret, and found Margaret standing by the gate.

"She's going to send me away, there! oh, Uncle Joe!" and her slender fingers closed tightly over his arm. He started as if a Derringer had been suddenly thrust in his face with murderous intent.

"You heard her then, Maggie?"

"Yes; what have I done to vex her so? I really cannot comprehend. I've tried hard to please you all, but it seems Aunt is not pleased. She has been hard on me lately, but I thought maybe she was tired, or worried over Cousin Eleanor's going off to school. I shall be ever talk like this before, Uncle Joe?"

"Yes, child; yet I never thought she was in earnest until now. It almost breaks my heart to think of it—to not see you around any more, Maggie; it's like a funeral—like a funeral," he paused and stroked her head, fondly. "Maybe she will relent," he added, presently.

"No, she will not," answered the girl, with a sob, "and I could not stay where I am not wanted, any way, even if she never urged my going again. But where can I go? I don't know anybody? Oh, I wish mother had not died, or that I might have died with her! I wonder why God lets things go on this way?"

"Be still, Maggie; don't question our Father's ways. I cannot answer your question, dear; but it will all come right in the end, if we only put our trust in Him. Don't ever forget that, Maggie; God's ways are always for the best."

"I suppose so; but now I am waking up the shadows, and the future is very dark. I really do not see where I have to go."

"Let me think," said her uncle, wiping the suspicious moisture from his eyes with his handkerchief.

Margaret guessed at her uncle's tears, although the deepening twilight obscured his countenance.

"Let me see," he continued, "there's your Aunt Lucinda's step-brother, Cyril Belknap. You remember him, Maggie? Well, he is as different as can be from your aunt. Now it strikes me that he would like to have you make your home in his great big house. He is a bachelor, and no one lives with him excepting his cousin, the housekeeper, and a servant or so. Besides, he said

Charlevoix, Mich., Harbor and Summer Resorts.

The above is a correct likeness of Charlevoix, although containing but a small portion of the buildings of Charlevoix, Mich., which is well-built over town, handsomely laid out, rapidly growing in favor and importance, and, most delightfully situated on one of the most beautiful harbors in northern Michigan. Charlevoix is a favorite resort for pleasure seekers, and during the months of July and August many hundreds of strangers, pleasure parties, and their places of interest, health, and pleasure, are to be found. Charlevoix is the terminus of the Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R., and the Detroit & Charlevoix steamboat line, which is making the fastest time. Ye bid me break my fiery chain,
Arise, and be a man again,
When every street with snares is spread,
And nets of sin where'er I tread.
No, I must reap as I did sow,
The seeds of sin bring crops of woe;
But with my latest breath I'll crave
That ye will try the boys to save.

These bloodshot eyes were once so bright
This sin-crushed heart was glad and light:
But by the wine-cup's ruddy glow
I traced a path to shame and woe.
A captive to my galling chain,
I've tried to rise, but tried in vain;
The cup allures and then destroys,
Oh, from its thraldoms save the boys!

Take from your streets those traps of hell
Into whose gilded snares I fell.
Oh! freeman, from those fowl decoys,
Arise and vote to save the boys.
And ye who license men to trade
In draughts that charm and then degrade,
Before you hear the cry: "Too late!"
Oh! save the boys from my sad fate!

To the Boys.

Water is the strongest drink. It drives mills; it is the drink of lions and horses. Samson never drank anything else. Let young men be teetotalers if only for economy's sake. The beer money will soon build a house. If what goes into the mash tub went into the kneading trough, families would be better fed, and better taught. If what is spent in waste was only saved for a rainy day, work houses would never be built. The man who spends his money with the publican, and thinks the landlord's bow and "How do you do, my good fellow?" mean true respect, is a perfect simpleton. We don't light fires for the herring's comfort, but to roast him. Men do not keep pot houses for the laborer's good: if they do, they certainly miss their aim. Why, then, should people drink "for the good of the house?" If I spend my money for the good of any house, let it be my own, not a landlord's. It is a bad well into which you must pour water; and the beer house is a bad friend, because it takes your all and leaves you nothing but headaches.

He who calls those his friends who let him sit by the hour together, is ignorant, very ignorant. Wise red lions and tigers and eagles and vultures are birds of prey, and why do so many put themselves within the power of their jaws and talons? Such as drink and live riotously, and wonder why their faces are so blotchy and their pockets so bare, would leave off wondering if they had two grains of wisdom. They might as well ask an elm tree for pears as to look to loose habits for health and wealth. Those who go to a public house for happiness climb a tree to find fish.—[Mr. Spurgeon on Temperance.

Can It be Exaggerated?

Mr. Gough says there are many persons who talk about temperance men as being fanatics. They tell us we are rabid on the subject of temperance. I ask my reformed drunkard if it is not right to be rabid against an evil that has scorched and blasted, seathed and scurred as till we carry the marks of it to the grave.

Young men sometimes have an idea that a young man can sow his wild oats and get over it. You put your hand in the hand of a giant and he crushes it. Still it may be healed and by and by it is even way if you be a useful one, but it is a mutilated hand: its beauty and symetry have gone forever. We who have passed through this fire know something of this awful scourge, we know something of the terrible struggle to get out of it. I think we ought to be what they call fanatic. They tell us we exaggerate the evils of drunkenness. Do we? Let me appeal to the intelligent and ask the question, "Do we exaggerate the evil of drunkenness?" No, sir, we cannot. God never gave a man a mind capable of grasping the extent of the awful evil of drunkenness for time and for eternity.—Golden Censor.

Temperance hotels are getting more numerous than in former times. This is a fact of which we are glad. Temperance people can do more if they would, toward bringing about this result. They should support temperance hotels wherever they can, and not pay their money in the coffers of saloon hotels.

Protected, but Starving.

Wool and woolen goods are heavily taxed in this country. The pretense under which this is done is that if foreign manufactures can be kept out of the United States, better wages may be paid to employes of mills here. The tax on raw wool was put on, as everybody knows, for the purpose of quieting a certain percentage of the farmers, who found that the tariff cost them millions without giving them anything in return. If it can be shown that weavers do not receive as good wages as street car employes do, for instance, it must be admitted that the tax does not accomplish its object, and that the increased prices thereby by manufacturers simply go to swell the profits of capital. This can be done in a great many instances.

The great woolen mills at Passaic, N. J., employing imported labor for the most part, are now closed because even the "paupers" in their service have struck against further reductions in pay. The stories told by some of these workers show how the tariff "dignifies and ennobles labor." By working long hours some of the weavers say they were able to make $5 a week, but most of them could not make more than $3. They were paid by the piece and received five cents for each blanket. One man who had a wife and two children to support received on the last pay day a few cents less than $10 for two weeks' work. A smart girl twenty two years old who worked until 9 o'clock every night, was paid $5.85 for two weeks' work, and others working equally hard made even less.

Nothing in "free trade England," where nearly everything that working people need is cheaper than it is here, surpasses these instances in hardship. Since the tariff on woolen goods costs the people of this country millions of dollars annually, and results in such abject misery as this that some few men may make millions, why should it be continued?—[Chicago Herald.

Detroit Labor Leaf: The Alpena Labor Journal gives the following prices for the benefit of those who wish by strict industry and self-denial to carve out a fortune and a name for themselves:

"For log drivers, 18 hours a day, $1 to $1.50; flour, $5; best butter, 30 cents; meat 16 cents; slab shanties, $4 to $7 per month."

Lumbering is a protected industry —for the employer—and one of the results of that protection is to enable him to grind down wages and charge his own prices. The people pay both ways.

Private vs. Public Advertising

The newspaper is, in every sense, the best medium for advertising; and, for a given result, it is by far the cheapest also. It reaches a far greater number of possible customers than any private announcement can; and it is more certain to receive attention. The private circular is thrown aside as a thing which people have come to regard as a bore, and which is neglected because its recipients have no time to attend to it. The newspaper is read in each day's hour of leisure, and readers find interest in reading its advertisements as well as its news, because of the variety they present and the information they convey respecting a wide diversity of interests. It may be safely estimated that an announcement made through the press is noticed by fifty readers, where, made in a private way, it would reach but one. If, therefore, the same amount were expended in either case, the result would be fifty-fold better from the former method than from the latter. There are, undoubtedly, cases in which the circular is a better medium than the newspaper. But such cases are quite exceptional, and the sooner advertisers learn the folly of their present large expenditures in seeking publicity through private means, the better for their pockets and their success.—[New York Bulletin.

Punnihaugan and thirty of his braves have surrendered to Gen. Middleton, and handed over 200 stand of arms. Advices from Battleford give the following particulars of the surrender:

Punnihaugan's Message to Middleton.—Say I am camped with my people on Eagle Hill, where I am receiving news of the surrender of Ib'l. No letter came with the news, so I can not tell how far it may be true. I send some of my men to you to learn the truth and terms of peace. I and my people wish you to send terms in writing, so that we may be under no misunderstanding, from which so much trouble arises. We have twenty-one prisoners, whom we have tried to treat well in every respect. With greeting. PUNNIHAUGAN.

His X mark.

Middleton's Reply.—POUNDMAKER: I have utterly defeated the half-breeds and Indians, and made prisoners of Riel and most of his council. I have made no terms with them, neither will I make terms with you. I have men enough to whip you and your people, or at least drive you away to starve, and will do so unless you bring in the teams you took, yourself and councillors, to me, with your arms. I am glad to hear that you have treated the prisoners well and have released them.

FRED MIDDLETON, Major General.

Promptly on time Poundmaker arrived with the captured wagon train, some stock, and scouts, under both reporter and interpreter, and a few flint-locks, numbering in all 250. Gen. Middleton then held a big pow-wow, which lasted three hours. Poundmaker pleaded hard for inciting the Indians to rise, and said he came in to tell the General to kill him so as to save his people. Several chiefs followed, all blaming Riel for misleading them. A scene occurred during the pow-wow between Poundmaker and blind Bayear Fremont, and whose name was given the circle, kneeled at Gen. Middleton's feet, saying the great chief could cut him in pieces, as he killed Payne in self-defense. He said he did not kill Payne in cold blood, but in the distractor, as he was going hunting. He was refused, and Payne, he alleges, attempted to shoot him. Fremont says he succeeded, but the Indian regained it and shot him with buckshot. His grandson, Wasonies, also pleaded for murdering an old blind Bayear Fremont, who was greasing a wagon. The murderers were taken into custody. Although the spectacle was a touching one, no sentiment will be spent discarding the Indians and trying the half-breeds. Settlers say they will not return back to their farms until the Indians are put where they can do no harm.

A Deming (New Mexico) telegram reports: "The Indians are scattered in small bands in different parts of Southern New Mexico, mostly in the vicinity of the Black Range. More than that the settlers can not get a clew, employed in his office, his nephew, the son of 25 per week as salary for him as clerk in the Postoffice when his services as such clerk in the office were only nominal and unnecessary. APACHE HOSTILES WHIPPED.

The Savages Break Away, and Are Encavcring to Get Into Old Mexico.

The New Mexican Indians have for several days back been on the rampage, killing settlers, stealing stock, and generally painting things red. The palefaces are now having their innings, however, and the copper-colored contributors are on the dead run. A dispatch from Deming, New Mexico, reports:

Capt. Smith, of the 4th cavalry, had an engagement with renegades, about thirty miles from Alma, in which three soldiers and three Indian scouts were wounded. The Indians were repulsed, but with what loss is not known. Sixteen companies and sixty Indian scouts are now in the field and will be shortly reinforced by two hundred Indian scouts from the San Carlos Agency, Arizona, composed of Tontos, Mojaves, and Arivapai. At the time of the engagement with the troops mentioned in the message, numbering about one thousand, in advance of the warriors, of whom there are three-fourths adult and half-grown braves. Gen. Bradley expresses the opinion that the renegades will, if pressed too closely, strike for Cook's Canyon, cut into Mexico, east of Deming. In anticipation of this move, two companies of troops have been sent to intercept them at the canyon. The troops proceeding to the rear on all sides, and another conflict is expected at any moment. So far eight men are reported killed, three near Alma, and five in the Mogollon Mountains."

A Washington dispatch states that a telegram in regard to the recent Indian outbreak, of which the following is a copy, has been sent to the commander of the troops in the Division of the Pacific and to the Governors:

"Use every exertion possible, and call for all available Federal troops you may require, to suppress the Indian outbreak in Arizona and New Mexico. These outrages must be stopped in the shortest time possible, and every person taken in arms prevent their occurrence in the future. By order of the Secretary of War.

"R. C. DRUM, Adjutant General."

The above order is the result of a conference between the President, the Secretary of War, and Mr. Oliver S. Teall, of New York.

Charlevoix people have, this week, demonstrated that they are not too proud to attend a cheap entertainment. Stevens' operatic comedy company had crowded houses at ten cents where at 25 cents the first row of chairs would hardly have been filled. This principle should be applied to some other things.

The ministerial association of the Grand Traverse destrict of the M. E. church, will meet next Tuesday, June 9th, at the Charlevoix M. E. church. We made a trip to East Jordan on the steamer Friant last Wednesday and saw the beauties of the "South Arm" for the first time. Shut in by the high ground between the waters of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan, from the cold northwest winds which have prevailed this spring, vegetation is at least a week in advance of the Little Traverse basin; and the woods which crowned the slopes on either hand were clothed with green. The trip is a delightful one, and particularly pleasant when taken with Captain Vanderhoof in his fast and neat boat. The "Friant" is not only very fast but runs on schedule time; so that a traveler or excursionist can calculate on arrivals and departures with as much certainty as on railroad trains. People can spend a day in no more pleasant manner than to spend it on the Friant. Leaving here at 7.30 A. M. they have two hours in East Jordan for dinner and arrive at Petoskey at 5.30 P. M.—[Record.

The F. G. White combination at the opera house last week improved both in attendance and merit each succeeding night. "Risen from the Ashes," on Thursday night, was pronounced by many the best ever presented here. F. G. White as "Wool," in the "Hidden Hand," and as the "Yankee farmer," in "Joshua Whitcomb," is certainly hard to beat.

How would it seem some morning in church when the contribution box is passed, for some one to step in a big hunk of pork, or to offer a couple of quarts of beans as a debt at a church social; this question is propounded to us by a mill-man who gets his pay in store orders and who likes to go to church, and is willing to bear his share of any financial burden that may properly accrue thereupon.—[Enterprise.

Milwaukee, May 28.—The wrecked barge L. C. Butts arrived here this morning from Beaver Island in tow of the tug Leviathan. She was released after 250 tons of her cargo had been jettisoned. She was docked this afternoon and the survey will be held to morrow. She did not lose her shape, but her bottom is full of holes and several small boulders are imbedded in it. She will require an almost entire keel and bottom.

Dr. Carlstein has commenced a house on the north side of Main street which will be rather novel for this place, and should be imitated by other house builders, for the good of "our women folks," if for no other reason. It will be large, and contain plenty of room, but there will be no chamber, and no stairs to climb. The roof will be so constructed and ornamented as to look well among the two-story houses around it.

J. W. Hilton, the architect, has just completed plans and specifications for the new residence of Hon. H. O. Rose, to be built this season, at Petoskey. The plans show a handsome and convenient twelve room, two story, East-Lake cottage, with basement under all, furnace, fire places, both rooms and all modern improvements. It will be a handsome structure when completed, and present a fine appearance on the commanding site it will occupy, opposite the Arlington.—[Traverse Herald.

The first exercises of the season will be given from East Jordan to Beaver Island and return, on Sunday, June 7, by the fast and popular steamer Thomas Friant, leaving East Jordan at 7:30 a. m., touching at the several landings on the west side of Pine Lake, arriving at Beaver Island at 10:30 a. m. Returning, leave Beaver Island at 2 p. m. The East Jordan Cornet Band will furnish music for the occasion. Fare, for round trip, 75 cents.

On Tuesday morning, while Michael Downey was splitting wood, Sam Thatcher, who has charge of him, remonstrated with him about hailing a man across the street, and as Sam turned to go into the engine room, Mike raised the axe and struck a blow, which Sam saw in time to dodge and save his life. There was so much force in the blow that the axe went over the fence into the next yard, and if Sam had not dodged it would have split his head open. Here is a case for the authorities. Mike may be harmlessly insane, but no one knows when he will make an assault that will destroy human life. He ought to be confined somewhere all the time. If the State has no asylum for him, let our own jail be used in some manner, so as to protect the lives of our citizens. As it is now, while he is at liberty to roam all over town, no one can tell when he will enter some dwelling and not only frighten but possibly injure for life or kill some person by his insane assmits.

The Press Association.

The executive committees of the Michigan state and Western Michigan press associatintions, which met recently to prepare for the annual meetings and excursion, decided to hold the next meeting of the two associations at Traverse City July 6, and to have a joint excursion. The program was outlined as follows: Monday, 7 p. m. business meeting of Western Michigan Press Association; Tuesday, 10 a. m.—Literary exercises of the Western Michigan Press Association; Tuesday, 8 p. m.—Joint Banquet. On Wednesday at 7 a. m. the excursionists will leave Traverse City for Charlevoix, thence to Petoskey, where a banquet will help pass away the evening, and from there local excursions will be indulged in and the party return home.

Memorial Day.

Baxter post carried out their part of the programme last Saturday exceptionally well and with the aid of the band and the school made a good procession, but the various societies and citizens generally did not respond, which the members of the post feel somewhat keenly.

In the morning there was promise of rain (south of us it rained hard nearly all the forenoon), which probably kept many at home; but in the afternoon there was a fair crowd in town. Here there was not rain enough to lay the dust, and after ten o'clock the day was bright and warm.

At the cemetery the usual exercises were given, with an address by E. H. Green.

Miss Alice Green, of East Jordan, returned home from Valparaiso with Mamie Nicholls and Lettie Mason, on the city of Grand Rapids last Monday.

Rev. C. P. Van Anken has partially recovered from his sickness of last week, and will hold services at the Congregational church next Sunday morning as usual.

Harvey Wilson, who a few weeks ago submitted to a surgical operation for rupture, and after he was to near dead to raise an objection, is again on our street. This is one case where it cannot be said that the man lived in spite of the doctors,—he was within a few hours of death, and past all consciousness of pain or surroundings, and yet by a rare combination of circumstances he is now in a fair way of permanent recovery.

A. D. Bradbeer is making remarkably good improvement this week. On Wednesday the disease had concentrated in his left foot and was lanced. This morning when dressed it had an ugly appearance, but was comparatively painless, and Dave is able to help himself up in bed freely and easily at his own pleasure.

Notice of Attachment.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, The Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix.
A. E. Upright et al
vs.
N. E. Warren.

Notice is hereby given that on the second day of May, 1885, a writ of attachment was issued out of the Circuit Court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of A. E. Upright, late Emery, and Hale W. Ives, copartners doing business at the village of Beaver Island, under the name and style of Upright, Emery & Co., plaintiffs, against the lands, tenements, goods and chattels of one Vanderlinde Warren of the township of Beaver Island in the county of Charlevoix, defendant, and levied upon the following described lands and premises, to-wit: [illegible]

A TRUE STORY.

BY ATTIC KINE.

"Where is the baby, grandmamma?"
"The sweet young mother calls
From her rocm in the upper kitchen,
With its dainty white-washed walls.
And crosses a room below it panting,
Robed in cake-flour and gravel;
But not a tressed baby-bright
Can any where be found."

No sound of its merry prattle,
No gleam of its sunny hair,
No print of its footsteps,
No sign of it anywhere.
All through the narrow garden,
Up and up the bold,
It has never been such an corner,
But nothing is revealed.

And the mother's face grew pallid;
Grim Rumour's eyes grew dim;
The ladies "gone to the village;"
No time to look for him.
And the lady host "Who's a Rover?"
The mother loomed to think
Of the old well in the orchard
Where the cattle used to drink.

"Where's Rover? I know he'd find her!
Rover?" In vain they call,
Then hurry away to the wood;
And there by the moss-grown wall,
Close to the well, her Rover,
Bidding to leave it cross;
She was leaning over the well's edge
In perfect tenderness!

She stretched her little arms down,
But Rover held it fast
And never seemed to mind the kicks
The fine hare-lost cast.
So quietly upon him,
But wagged his tail instead,
To greet the frightened searchers
While naughty Rover's head.

"Down a little end on the water;
She died so long ago,
Mamma. I won't bother her out,
As I like her home to go,
But Rover, he won't let me,
And I don't love him. Go
Away, you naughty Rover;
Oh, Why are you crying so?"

The mother kissed her saying:
"My darling, understand,
Good Rover saved you but, my dear—
And see, he licks your hand."
Like Rover? Let's stretch him,
I at random enclose him,
So said. "He's hard to think the friend
Who like to be torn good."

"THE BULL-CATS."

A Night of Adventure.

BY COMFORT MARSHALL.

The tale that I am about to relate was told me by my uncle, who, as he is still living, I will call by the name of Robert Ulman. I will tell it as he told it to me when it first happened, and when the horror of its memory was still fresh upon his mind:

It was in the autumn of the year 1852 that business connected with a firm in Columbia carried me among the mountains of a neighboring State. The evening of the second day of my adventure was chilly and cloudy, and I was anxious to reach shelter before dark set in, as I had been warned by robbers that had been committed by a band of men who called themselves "The Bull-bat or Night-hawk Band."

I had taken the precaution to arm myself, and, moreover, was blessed, or cursed, with the light purse that is falsely said to be the accompaniment of a still lighter heart. Robbers are generally accredited with the keen scent and unerring instinct of that bird who lives only by death—the vulture—and I reasoned that I had little to fear and stand in no fear of the "Bull-Bats"—if indeed they had any existence other than in the brain of some imaginative fool.

I kept, however, a sharp look-out around me, but nothing met my view in this apparently heaven-forsaken wilderness except here and there a skeleton tree or old tumble-down cabin, the relic of the lucky heritage scattered sparsely about.

A little further, though, and my vigilance was rewarded in a most delightfully unexpected way, for walking hurriedly ahead of me I discovered the form of a young girl, who was striding along with an athletic grace that struck admiration to my heart.

I have all the time been a slave to the charms of the fair sex, and in these solitary regions the temptation was one too great to withstand. So, spurring my jaded beast, I trotted up alongside of her, and, lifting my hat in my most winning manner, inquired if she had dropped a pocket-book, at the same time shamelessly hauling on and displaying one of my own.

My rose was rewarded with a keen glance from a pair of enchantingly blue eyes, and a negative answer in such pure language as surprised me for hitherto I had only encountered a boorishness of manner and uncouthness of dialect.

I quickly followed up my advantage, and sprucing from my saddle, stood before her, hat in hand, and suggested if she knew of a place I could obtain a night's lodging.

My movements had apparently frightened her, for without a word she hied up the mountain path; and I, loath to lose sight of her, followed in hot pursuit, and gained her side just in danger when I saw her disappear around a jutting crag and no sign to indicate where she had gone.

However, it was to use pursuing any further, and, inward cursing myself fool, I became aware that a storm was rising. Every now and then a little sharp gusts of wind would blow the raindrops in my eyes and little whirlwinds of dried leaves would come sailing around me and then continue their phantom dance afar off in the gloomy gulch.

I knew that there was no danger of my losing wandering off, and so, turning this time, I sought with her footsteps my discouraging task that was completely cut off the winds of rain. After ten minutes' hard riding I came to a place where I could see no way of longer journeying, and so, dismounting, I made a virtue of necessity and struck a camp-fire.

The night darkened for one second and then went out, but not before I had detected a small aperture in the rear of the crevice, concealed by an armful of brush thrown against it. If I had to spend the night in so unpleasant a place, why not be as comfortable as possible; and so sweeping away the brush I crept through the aperture, feeling my way as carefully as circumstances permitted.

On getting inside I again struck a light, and a host of lurid flame tumbling about me, and one or two owls, all attracted by the light. I never had been able to hear the scream of the owl without recalling the old legend of Pharaoh's daughter, who was transformed into an owl, and her bitter cry:

Oh, one or
I once was a King's daughter, and sat on my father's knee;
But now I'm a poor hoviet, and hide in a hollow tree!

Since that night my associations with the owl are very different and far more unpleasant.

I had always been in the habit of carrying a dark-lantern in my pocket, and this I now took out and lighted, with a view to investigating the place, first taking the precaution of hanging my overcoat in front of the aperture.

I threw the beams of the lantern in front of me, and the first object that attracted my attention was a brace of birds, commonly called the bull-bat or night hawk, cured, stretched, and nailed to the wall. At first what this man and did not dawn on me, and I simply wondered who had been the prior dis-coverer and what sort of a bird-fancier, whether he was a bird-fancier. Then I stepped forward, and nearly fell over a soft yielding object, over which I then knelt, and started back in horror to meet the eyes of a dead man distended with fright glaring me at me. The thing was such a shock that cold shivers went running all over me, and I nearly beat a precipitate retreat; but curiosity overcame me, and hastily covering his face with my handkerchief to shut out the awful state of his eyes, I again turned to look about me. There was nothing much else except a motley array of guns, knives and pistols stored away in one corner, and then turning back to the corpse I examined him to find that he had been struck a blow on the back of the head, and concluded that he had been robbed and dragged here previously to being disposed of or buried.

The meaning then of the birds hanging over me. This was the den or hiding place of the "Bull-Bat Band," and here probably they concealed their treasures—and here probably they would soon return to dispose of their victim. As I felt no desire to share his fate I concluded that instant flight would be the best manner of proving that discretion which is said to be the better part of valor.

I took my handkerchief off the dead man's face, for I had no desire of leaving any trace whereby I might be tracked, identified and murdered, and creeping out on my hands and knees, I rushed out into the wild night as if pursued by a thousand demons. I old woman came up to us, and the golden opportunity was past.

Without the rain dripped and the wind howled cheerlessly; the old house creaked and shook as if its last hour had come, and the wild spirit of the storm was struggling to embrace it with the endless arms of space.

Within the fire crackled merrily in the huge old chimney place, and as I warmed myself by the blazing hearth I thought of the dead man lying in that cave out on the mountain side, with his eyes staring open, while the wind howled and the rain beat above him, and then I wondered where would I be by morning. I thrust this question, with its ghastly possibilities, from me, and looked instead at Diana; but a vague feeling of undefined fear was creeping over me, not even to be dissipated by the clear, symmetrical beauty of this sylvan goddess.

A simple evening meal was served up, and as in conclusion the old woman poured out a glass of spirits and offered it to me. I was on the point of drinking, but as it touched my lips, Diana, apparently by accident, struck against my arm and the glass shivered on the floor. The old woman glared fiercely at us, and without saying a word got up and left the room for the purpose of fetching another glass of it in our hands and I must, and as she stepped out the door I dealt him a stunning blow on the head, and with an execration and a howl of pain, he staggered across the room and then came desirous of averting the effect.

In a little time I pretended to be drowsy, and the old woman conducted me up through a trap-door to an attic apparently above the room we had just left. I tumbled down all in a heap on the floor and pretended to snore loudly, while she hastened down to Diana, and I heard them engaged together in low tones. I heard the old wretch whisper:

"You go up and do it, for you are stronger than I, and he might struggle in his sleep."

"I will not," I heard Diana answer, fiercely. "I am tired of the work, and intend to quit as soon as chance offers."

"You do, do you?" I heard the old woman croak, fauntingly. "I will report you to-night to the Captain."

More whispering followed, and I heard Diana leave the house. I was prepared if any of them had come, but, being very tired with my journey, I found myself gradually dropping off to sleep and then suddenly waking up and listening, until, finally, I stopped listening altogether and went off into a nap as sound as that of any of the Seven Sleepers.

I was suddenly awakened by a scream loud and piercing. All was dark and silent around me, and at first I thought I was in the midst of a dream. My heart beat with such wild, heavy thuds at the sudden awakening that I could hear the pulsation. Then another fainter scream came, and groans, followed by several dull, heavy blows. Then all was silent. I groped my way to the little trap-door entrance and climbed stealthily down, and then I put my ear to the door of the room from whence the sounds had apparently came. I heard a stealthy movement within, and opening the door softly, I peeped inside, and saw a man kneeling by an open trap-door in the floor. In a second he had dragged, and as I crept up to the place and peered down after him, my head reeled with the sights that met my gaze. At the bottom of the hole that he carried I could see him, hastily thrusting away treasures in an old sack, and opening the door softly, I stepped in, and saw a man kneeling by an open trap-door in the floor. In a second he had dragged, and as I crept up to the place and peered down after him, my head reeled with the sights that met my gaze. At the bottom of the hole that he carried I could see him, hastily thrusting away treasures in an old sack, and opening the door softly, I stepped inside

Charlevoix, Mich., Harbor and Summer Resorts.

The above is a geographically correct view (though containing but a small portion of the half-dozen) of Charlevoix, Mich., a village of over twelve hundred inhabitants, rapidly growing in favor as a resort as well as one of the most delightful Summer resorts and safest harbors in northern Michigan. Several lines of steamers concentrate here, connecting at all hours of the day with all surrounding towns, fishing streams, picnic parks, and other places of interest, health, and pleasure. Unequaled inducements are also offered the permanent settler who desires to invest his capital in manufacturing enterprises where it will bring the best results. The resources of the country are being developed so as to bring the richest returns. For any other information regarding the village or surroundings, address

ONLY NOW AND THEN.

Think it no excuse, boys,
Merging into men,
That you do a wrong act
Only now and then.
Better to be careful,
As you go along,
If you would be manly,
Capable and strong.

Many a wretched sot, boys,
That one daily meets,
Drinking from the beer kegs,
Living in the streets,
Or at best in quarters
Worse than any pen,
Once was dressed in broadcloth,
Drinking now and then.

When you have a habit
That is wrong you know,
Knock it off at once, lads,
With a sudden blow.
Think it no excuse, boys,
Merging into men,
That you do a wrong act
Only now and then.
—Youth's Temperance Banner.

A Short Sermon.

The famous Dr. Dodd was met one day upon the high road by some bacchanals and compelled by them to preach a sermon on an old stump from a text of their own choosing. They gave the little man "Malt" as his text and bade him proceed.

"Beloved" said he, "I am a little man, come at short warning to deliver a brief discourse upon a small subject, to a thin congregation, and from an unworthy pulpit. My text is 'Malt' which cannot be divided into either words or syllables it being but one. I must therefor reduce it into letters, M-A-L-T.

"M is Moral; A is Allegorical; L is Literal; and T is Theological. The moral is set forth to teach you drunkards good manners: therefore, M, my masters; A, all of you; L, listen; T, to my text.

"The allegorical is when one thing is spoken and another is intended; the thing expressed is Malt, which you bacchanals make M, your meat; A, your apparel; L, your liberty, and T, your text. The literal is according to the letter. M, much; A, ale; L, little; T, thrift.

"The theological is according to the effect it produces, which I find to consist of two kinds; First, respects this life; second, that which is to come. The effects which it produces in this world are in some M, murder; in others A, adultery; in all L, licentious lives; in many T, treason. The effects consequent in the world to come are: M, misery; A, anguish; L, lamentation; T, torment. And now, beloved, first, by way of exhortation: M, my masters; A, all of you; L, leave off tippling: or secondly, by way of combination: M, my masters: A, all of you; L, look for; T, torment.

"Now, to wind up the whole and draw to a close, take with you the character of a drunkard. A drunkard is the annoyance of modesty, the spoil of civility, his own shame, his wife's sorrow, his children's curse, his neighbor's scoff, the ale house man's benefactor, the devil's drudge, a walking swillbowl, the picture of a beast, and monster of a man."

With this extemporaneous phillipic the little man got down from his unworthy pulpit and left the paralyzed drunkards in amazement.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"No," said an old maid, "I don't miss a husband very much. I have trained my dog to growl every time I feed him, and I have just bought a clothing-store dummy that I can scold when I feel like it."

A photographer recently acted as master of ceremonies at a friend's funeral, and, as he lifted the coffin lid for the mourners to look at the remains, whispered to the corpse: "Now, look natural." Force of habit.

"Ah, Mrs. Crimsonbeak," said young Miss Fussenfather, after conversing with that lady's husband at the musicale the other evening, "I've found your husband out at last." "That's not a difficult thing to do," replied Mrs. Crimsonbeak, indifferently. "Come around to the house any time of night and you'll always find him out."

"What are you doing, pet?" "I am studyin' my Sunday school lesson." "Is it hard?" "It's awful hard. Here's a question I can't answer. It says, 'Who was it said all men are liars?' Do you know who it was, pa?" "Yes; it was David." "David! How did he come to say that, pa?" "Well, I don't know, pet. Maybe he was running for office."

The Philadelphia Record relates this tale of Friendville: A gentleman was one day refusing to a Quaker a tale of deep distress, and concluded by saying: "I could not but feel for him." "Verily, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou didst feigh in that thou didst feel for thy neighbor; but didst thou feel in the right place—didst thou feel in thy pocket?"

"What can possibly all you, my man?" asked a gentleman of a very dilapidated tramp who asked him for a quarter. "Are you unable to obtain a living? You look strong and healthy." "Ah, sir, I suffer from the general overproduction," replied the tramp. "What overproduction?" exclaimed the gentleman, in astonishment. "An overproduction of tramps."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Witty Repartee.

Ex-Mayor Edson of New York may claim credit for one of the wittiest recorded repartees of the new year. The occasion was the dinner of the Lotos club to the outgoing and incoming Mayors of the city. Whitelaw Reid presided. Mayor Grace sat on his right. Ex-Mayor Edson sat on his left. Two years ago their positions were exactly reversed. Grace going out of office and Edson being the new Mayor. When it came Edson's turn to speak he said:

I gladly appear in this position at the left of the President, because, for one reason, Mayor Grace and myself have only changed places this year. He sits at the right and I sit at the left. Two years ago I sat at the right and he sat at the left. [Laughter.]

The President (aside)—Two years hence you will both be left. [Laughter.]

Mr. Edson (continuing)—I venture to hope and I venture to believe that Mayor Grace will so acquit himself in the office of Mayor that two years from now he will occupy both sides of the table. [Loud applause and laughter.]

Ferdinand Ward's Generosity.

Up in Livingston county, where the venerable father and mother of Ferdinand Ward live, one hears not a little about the ex-financier. As his boyhood days were also spent in the Genesee valley, a good many stories are told of him, and not a little sympathy is manifested for him in his downfall. To his credit it must be said that he was liberal with his money, so far as old friends and institutions are concerned, and a number of churches in western New York sincerely mourn the fact that they will be no more the recipient of his bounty. Among others the Presbyterian church in Dansville, of which Rev. G. K. Ward—Ferdinand's cousin—is pastor, received his check for $1,000, while an Episcopal church in Rochester fared much better. It was only a very short time before the crash that an aunt of Ferdinand's, a member of the church mentioned, was visiting him at his home in Brooklyn. One day she incidentally mentioned the fact that her church was in debt and sadly in need of funds, whereupon he wrote her a check for $1,000. The best part of it was that the gentlemen connected with this church were under a standing pledge that for every $500 the ladies would raise they would contribute $25 more. When Ferdinand's aunt turned in the $1,000 on the ladies' account it called for $250 from the men. They paid it, but it so nearly broke them up in business—theologically speaking—that they declared the contract off, on and after that contribution.—New York Graphic.

WESTERN.

A furious wind, rain, and hail storm swept over the Northwest on the 24 inst., doing great damage to property. The storm was attended by a brilliant electric display. At Chicago a large number of houses were struck by lightning. Four people were killed and a number of others were knocked down by the electric fluid. At Canton, Dakota, a farmer was killed, and another received a fatal stroke at Wessen, Minnesota. At Monmouth, Illinois, several buildings were unroofed by the wind, and the stocks of traders damaged by water. The roof of the woolen factory was crushed in by the falling smoke-stack, and a fierce was burned by lightning. Several citizens took refuge in their cellars during the storm, which lasted thirty minutes. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a span of the Illinois was blown away, and gales was broken throughout the city by hailstones.

Farmers' pests: The Hessian fly is reported to be doing great damage to the Kansas wheat crop. Ground-squirrels are destroying the corn in some sections of Indiana. In Tennessee chinch-bugs and potato-bugs are unusually numerous, and voracious, making it interesting for to farmers to ward off its ravages. There are also complaints of the ravages of cut-worms. Wire-worms and chinch-bugs are reported as doing some damage to the corn in portions of Iowa and Illinois. The Ohio Live-Stock Commission sends out word that pleuro-pneumonia has been entirely stamped out in that State.

The latter, who was in a highly drunken condition, began abusing his mother, and when the doctor, a lady visitor with a choir Dr. Kay and the entertainment attempted to get the material and invention of securities. It is said authorities that not another sheet of the Ulver paper now in use will be purchased. A much finer paper, with a glossy surface and more enduring qualities, will be adopted. The final note of the failure is much more artistic in design.

The public debt statement shows a decrease of $4,225,000 for the month of May.

No Protection for Everybody.

No tariff law ever to be enacted will protect everybody. Under any law passed whereby taxes are levied for the benefit of special interests there must be taxpayers as well as the beneficiaries of such taxation. It is a true one of taxation as it is of math ematics that out of nothing nothing comes. The money that a tariff law puts long to the pockets of an iron-master, corn lumber manufacturer, or a coal monopolist, comes out of somebody sort of money already earned and saved by somebody engaged in a more or less profitable occupation. It is no less to injustice. It takes good money already earned and sinks it, wholly or partially, in sustaining what it is claimed would otherwise be unprofitable industries. There is no such thing possible under any system of taxation as protecting everybody at the expense of everybody. Those who are protected must receive their protection at the expense of somebody else. When tariff laws are passed to protect manufacturers it must be at the expense of those who are not manufacturers. It is impossible to frame a tariff or tax laws for the benefit of a particular class or interest without doing so at the cost of other classes and interests. When men are able to get something out of nothing, and not tax them, will they be able to devise a tariff law that will make money for everybody at the expense of nobody. Men have always sought it to be a different matter to lift them selves over a fence by their own bootstraps; but they can do this as easily as the mess of mankind can gain any thing by protective tariff laws. Jack son Patriot.

Small Comfort for Soldiers.

Michigan soldiers may as well give up all hope of ever securing the equalization of state bounties. They were tricked into petitioning for a state soldiers' home, and that has been given them as a sop to quiet their just demands. I do not think it goes far toward discharging the obligations we owe the soldiers, but it is sufficient for a pretense. On Thursday the bill came back from the senate with a few amendments, the only important one being a reduction of $50,000 in the appropriation. Yesterday the house concurred in the amendments and by the time this is in type the bill will be a law. We shall now have another expensive and burdensome institution to support—an institution the United States ought to maintain—and the soldiers' claim will be hereafter disregarded on the ground that this institution squares the account between them and the state.—[C. S. Haugton.

Patching up the Tax Laws.

Both houses have fixed up the tax laws temporarily by adopting a new law hashed up of the laws of '79 and '82. A hard fight was made by tax reformers to incorporate features in the interests of the people, the efforts of Mr. Richardson and Mr. Lincoln being deserving of special praise, but the house was determined to adopt it with out amendments. One feature of the new bill is that personal property such as wood, logs, bark, ties, etc., are to be assessed where it is situated, instead of where the owners reside.—Harbor Springs Independent.

Notes and News.

Out of nine hundred and fifty five samples of French wines recently analyzed, but ninety-five were found to be genuine, the remainder being more or less adulterated with unwholesome things.

A temperance guild was organized in a barber shop among young men waiting to be shaved, in Troy, N. Y., by Rev. Father Dohm. He induced twenty two to sign the pledge, and the organization was formed immediately.

In redistricting the State for representatives in the legislature, the following groupings have a local interest here: Cheboygan, Emmet and Manistee make a district; Charlevoix and Antrim, Leelanaw and Benzie; Grand Traverse and Kalkaska.

Here now is a woman that has solved the civil service question, with the offensive partisan business thrown in. The postmistress at Napoleon, Mich., has just married the democrat who has the inside track as her successor. —Indianapolis Sentinel.

A man named Brand has been appointed to a Nebraska Postoffice. Now let him come over to Dubuque and clasp Postmaster Bean in a fraternal embrace. Between them a political sandwich could be mastered up.—[Peoria Transcrip.

Democrats all over the State feel jubilant over the removal of Jimmy Stone, one of the most offensive of partisans, and the substitution of the well-known democrat John B. Maloney, of Detroit, as Collector of Customs for the First District. President Cleveland made no mistake in that change. Jimmy Stone now takes no interest in the shape of Cleveland's head or the size of his collar.—Big Rapids Herald.

A London temperance manifesto to workmen contains the following: In manufacturing one hundred dollars' worth of liquor two dollars goes to labor. In manufacturing one hundred dollars' worth of boots and shoes, twenty-two dollars goes to labor. The money turned over by one distillery employing one hundred and fifty men would, if employed in more useful ways give work to fifteen thousand men.

The protectionists lay the flattering unction to their souls that is to say, to their pockets—that the democrats in the House can not be united on a "free trade bill," and that, therefore, no tariff revision will be had. No one is now asking for free trade. The demand is for freer trade—a removal of the tariff upon crude materials and a reduction of the duties upon the necessaries of life. Do the monopolists think the the war taxes are to stand forever? Why should the average duty be maintained at a point thirty per cent. above the revenue and protective tariff of 1857?—[Boston Herald.

The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1881 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 170,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories (Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Rolland's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.

From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,578 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American Journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a cheap paper for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—3 cents per day, 19 cents per week, 75 cents per month, $9.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is in large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

On Saturday they took a run up the Arm, and expressed astonishment at the beauty and apparent resources of the country. The yacht is probably the finest and swiftest that ever entered this harbor.

The manager of the Harbor Springs Independent relates his experience in commencing house keeping in a brief paragraph, a part of which fully expresses our experience moving office and family during the past week: "We have been trying to divide our time this week between setting "ads," writing copy, setting up stores, buying crockery, hanging wall paper, putting down carpets, putting up curtains, setting up jobs and collecting cash to pay paper bills, besides the few other little arrangements consequent on a first start in "house-keeping." If we've got any saleratus mixed up with this issue, please remember how it was yourself."

While on his recent trip east, Mr. W. P. Brown visited New York and several New England States, and reports business so bad there as here, with little prospect of improvement. However he succeeded in selling his property in New York, the proceeds of which he will put into his brick building on the corner now occupied by E. H. Green's office. He has the plans completed for a banking office in the corner, with residence on same floor, occupying also part of the second floor. The front rooms of the second floor will be finished for offices. Mr. Brown carries with his work every evidence of permanency, which might well be imitated by others.

States Attorney.

The re appearance of John Dillon, the well-known comedian, at the Academy last evening, constituted an event of unusual magnitude in the history of Milwaukee's theatrical affairs. The audience was quite large, taking into consideration the state of the weather. Mr. Dillon supplied his audience with a regular festival of farce comedy, in which he excels, and his impersonation of Pilgrim Boggs, the "Status Attorney," was one of the best of his assumptions. The role Tracy Bartram, the young Quakeress, was represented by Miss Nellie Walters, who seemed to fit the part precisely, while Mrs. Walters played the part of Bida Nowell, the village school-ma'am, with a remarkable degree of vigor and exhilarance.—[Milwaukee Sentinel. This company will appear at the opera house June 13th.

Coming—Rare Musical Treat.

Judging from the high reputation the Tennesseans have maintained since their organization in 1873, and the unlimited praise accorded them by eminent musical critics and the public press wherever they have been, it is not too much to predict that it will prove the best concert of vocal music ever given here. Their program embraces a large variety and wide range of singing, which cannot fail to please all. They were one of the leading attractions at Chautauqua at the last assembly.

On Wednesday afternoon, Petoskey and Charlevoix measured their respective strength with an interesting, good natured game, the result being almost a tie in numbers, but the difference in favor of Charlevoix.

LIVING.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

To toil all day and lie worn out at night,
To rise for all the years to slave and sleep,
And breed new brows to bend to no other thing
In toiling, bearing, line-line—life is this
To myriad men, too base for man or brute.

To serve for common duty, while the brain
Is fed with high desire to be distinct;
To fill the hard-grain place among the stones
That build the social wall in million sameness,
Is life by leave and death by in-candle-stare. —

To live the worried years, with dripping blood
Of sacrificial labor for a Thought;
To take the dearest love and lay it down
Beneath the crushing wheels for love of Freedom; —

To beat the world in every art and trade,
And go on bowing for a bit ideale—
This were a life worth giving to a cause,
If cause for found so worthy a matty life.

But highest life of man, nor work nor sacrifice,
But inner energy of the things that be;
To pass amid the hurrying crowds, and watch
The hungry things of vulgar use;
To mark the growth of baser lines of men;
To note the tending to a sacrifice;
To know the natural discord called disease
That rots like rust the blood and souls of men;
To test the wisdoms and philosophies by touch
Of that which is immutable, being clear,
The basis tool opens to the poet's vision;
To see with eyes of pity blessing souls
Strive upward to the Freedom and the Truth,
And still be backward dragged by fear and ignorance;
To see the beauty of the world, and hear
The rising harmony of growth, whose shade
Of undertone is harmonized clear;
To know that love is life—that hate is one
And useless—to the indoor that the heart
Is like a cup whilst for wine or love.
To see and feel this strange mystery,
The wrong of law, the right of man, the natural Life,
Partaking not of selfish aims, withholding not
The word that strengths man and the hand that helps;
Who walls and sympathizes with the prattiest life,
And hopes all things, and reaches into God
With thanks and blessing—became is living.

A PICAYUNE IN PERIL.

BY MEMO.

"My bride is the church," compassionately announced the Rev. Narcissus Picayune, looking with latherly tenderness upon the upturned faces of his audience.

The scene was in the lecture-room of the Tabernacle of Hillsburg, to which the reverend gentleman had been recently called by the almost unanimous vote of the congregation. It is true, a few old fogies were contented with the management and ways of his predecessor, kind-old Mr. Bonnspier, but they were a decided minority.

The women, dear creatures, who, although commanded to keep silent in the church, have no such command to keep upon their speech at home and abroad, discussed all the pros and cons of the subject. The young ladies especially insisted that Hillsburg was to get a energetic person, full of vim; in short, a young man.

"For," they argued, "if in politics and the state young blood and ideas are requisite to give an impetus in the march of progress, why not also in religion?"

For once the middle-aged spinsters and widows did not choke the forward zeal of their juniors (as they usually called "chits of girls."

So the matter was decided. Old Mr. Bonnspier was snubbed so persevering(ly) that even his eyes, when he saw fit, awakened to the fact that he had worn his welcome in Hillsburg threadbare. Wounded to the quick, he that day whom he had loved and served through gail report and good report should seem in his old age desire to be rid of him, he tendered his resignation, which having been immediately accepted he departed, sincerely mourned by a few friends, who would have been perfectly willing to jog along the narrow way, following his lure if not rapid guidance.

Being thus rid of the old love, the congregation naturally lost no time in providing itself with a new. But in desiring a man young in years but old in wisdom, who could take sin flat bow as sinners, himself included, exhibited every virtue, the good people of Hillsburg were scandalously seeking a Solomon combined.

Naturally, some time elapsed before such a one could be found. At length, however, Rev. Narcissus Picayune was invited to occupy the pulpit so long filled by Mr. Bonnspier.

Youth, at least, he possessed. If other sacred(ness) important qualifications were lacking, this was not apparent to the partial eyes of his judges, since to a sanctimonious air and a gift fungle-mented unbounded eloquence and a thorough conviction of his own superiority, mental and moral, to the common herd, which placed him comfortable beyond the arrows of adverse criticism.

Having accepted the call, in a few weeks he was domiciled at Hillsburg. Like the great Cæsar, he came, he saw, he conquered. Never had there been such a stir in the parish. "Truly, a great awakening," said the sober heads of families, as their daughters forsook the allurements of the dance and the roller-rink to drink from the Iberian spring of the Rev. Narcissus the quietness.

The young men were not quite so enthusiastic; but, as they speedily discovered that a deprecatory leer of the eyes once was sure to provoke a storm of indignation from his fair adherents, they also went over to the majority to all appearances, at least.

Many were the assertions made by the new parson. All were eagerly accepted. Mr. Bonnspier had been content with Sunday and semi-weekly services. His ardent successor heighten(ed) insisted upon having a service twice daily, to be heating the many building prayer rather expensive, he decided to hold both in the bed we round place in the church. It was here that he made the remark which opens this sketch to readers promptly.

Locate often lately it had flashed across the empty vastness of his mind that the female element in his congregation largely predominated.

Could it be that devotion to the man and not the cause of religion inspired them? Perish the thought! What a misfortune to be endowed with such powers of fascination! What, should any earthly love marry the heart devoted to a spiritual bride?

In the still hours of the night he resolved to state his intentions gently but firmly on the morrow.

"Disappointment will be better than suspense for the poor creatures," said he to himself; "I could not marry them all anyhow."

In pursuance of this intention he mounted the pulpit steps next day with Spartan resolve. The surgeon should not spare the knife.

Still, it seemed to him, there had never before been quite so many women and so few men. Young women, middle-aged women, and widows galore. His eyes rested with positive relief upon several nice old ladies occupying prominent seats in front.

"At any rate," he thought, "the law forbids a man to marry his grandmother."

Then the cold sweat burst from every pore as he recalled the Baroness Burdette Coutts.

"My hearers," said he, quite distinctly and positively, without the formality of announcing a text; "my bride is and ever shall be the church."

Perhaps, of all the Rev. Narcissus' listeners, upon whom the thunderbolt fell heaviest, was Miss Matilda Ann Hildebrand.

She was a lackadaisical old young lady, with a great reserve of selfishness and obstinacy, so well concealed by a veneering of gushing amiability and artless sweetness that few had ever penetrated below the surface. In her own opinion she was nothing if not æsthetic and deeply pious, but she was also lonely, and yearned for a congenial spirit. She had been in attendance to the appearance of the fleshly habitation of the wished-for spirit, which may account for her impossibility to the Rev. Narcissus' lack of personal attractions. For that gentleman was not beautiful to behold, by any means.

His bullet-head was set very straight by a long, slim neck on his square little shoulders; his pale, myopathetic eyes were ornamented with a decided squint; his mouth was a crease in his face, simply that and nothing more. When he was pleased, the crease widened. The Rev. Narcissus never delighted to smile. But in his jaw-bone was the true swardiness of the man displayed in large, square, aggressive. Had nature not possessed such a weapon in lieu of the one mentioned by Scripture, before the gates of Gaza, it would have been no miracle had the Philistines fallen by tens of thousands.

Matilda Ann was virtuously contemplating assuming all the requisites for a minister's wife.

Had she not been reared, so to say, by the very odor of sanctity? Was not her lamp, like the wise virgin's, always trimmed and burning, and, moreover, set up in a conspicuous place for every one to admire? She vowed a vow to herself on the spot. The parson, pausing as he left to instruct his hearers to say "Awmen, my brethren," a resurrection I make in fear-therly love," and accidentally meeting her eye, was so thunderstruck by its enormous sparkle that, even looking the three steps which led from the door, he fell forward, and in another moment his pecul xtremities were where his head ought to have been—high in the air.

The fair Matilda was a born general. She now surveyed the situation and marshaled her forces to victory or death. The Rev. Narcissus felt no inclination to escape. Fate, she was gracious and fair to look upon, but she had confided to him, early in their acquaintance, her intention of withdrawing from the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and retiring into a sisterhood. Consequently he construed matters of his confidence upon her, somewhat to the neglect of his parishioners in general.

Her perfect blandness found an approving ally at the tineese displayed by their guileless daughter, and in a quiet way it did not dismay to lend a helping hand.

Great was the silent indignation of the three three score and ten females of the congregation, who each thought herself a fitting mate for the Rev. Narcissus. What, had they gone to the trouble of getting rid of Mr. Bonnspier, only to provide that stuck-up Matilda Ann Hildebrand with a beau? For the sagacious females did not credit Miss Hildebrand's intention of joining the sisterhood.

Refreshed were the efforts put forth to make this most fascinating of parsons to assuage the woes he had undergone, and with one straw for herself, all made common cause against Matilda Ann.

The parsons self-esteem flourished in this favorable atmosphere like Jonah's gourd, and among the disaffected was the "weaker grew, that one small head could carry all he thought he knew."

He realized as his always sympathetic friend, Matilda Ann, that for the only argument which he could "conscientiously urge in favor of continuing was, that an unmarried minister, especially if he had a taking way with him, could not devote himself as he should to the welfare of the souls given in marital charges of his congregation, without exciting false hopes and unnecessarily inflicting pain upon susceptible hearts."

Miss Hildebrand not only agreed with him, but also volunteered the assurance that she could not have resisted for one moment.

Her perfect blandness found an approving ally at the tineese displayed by their guileless daughter, and in a quiet way it did not dismay to lend a helping hand.

Great was the silent indignation of the three three score and ten females of the congregation, who each thought herself a fitting mate for the Rev. Narcissus. What, had they gone to the trouble of getting rid of Mr. Bonnspier, only to provide that stuck-up Matilda Ann Hildebrand with a beau? For the sagacious females did not credit Miss Hildebrand's intention of joining the sisterhood.

I.

Just out from the noisy city's din,
Away from its hurry and rush,
There's a beautiful spot we will visit to-day
And breathe of its calm, holy hush.
Here are shaded valleys and sloping hills,
Tall hemlocks and whispering pines,
The brightest of flowers, the greenest of ferns,
Dark grasses and soft drooping vines.

Here are graveled drive-ways, broad and wide,
Winding through carpets of green;
Here are narrow footpaths enticing our feet
Past lake-let, and fountain and stream;
'Tis a beautiful spot, this holy retreat,
Where sadness and silence reign,
And the marble headstones gleaming white,
Speak of loneliness, anguish and pain.

Let us pause at this mound where a granite shaft
Towers high amid the leaves above,
A beautiful offering of fresh cut flowers
Tells of a fond parent's love.
'Tis said that each Sabbath, the whole year thro',
In sunshine or cold or storm,
Fair flowers are laid by a father's hand
O'er his darling's sleeping form.

You admire and praise, but I stop and ask,
Do we live for the spirits fled?
Do flowers on the coffin or mossy grave
Bring peace to the silent dead?
Can a heart so seemingly tender and fond,
Do ever an unkind deed?
Does love for his darling prompt ever a thought
For the little ones suffering in need?

II

"Mother, dear mother," the voice was weak,
And came from a couch of pain.
"Mother, wont father come home to-night;
Shall I never see him again?"
The mother raised her drooping head,
At her darling's pleading tone,
But the only answer her lips could frame
Was a low, heart-stricken moan.

The night was wild and bitter cold—
Outside the snow fell fast,
And few, though muffled in beaver and fur,
Dared brave the wintery blast.
The streets were deserted, the alleys were dark,
The busy city was still;
But the sheltered inmates of palace homes
Scarce heeded the dark night's chill.

In one of the narrowest, darkest lanes,
Stands a hovel, lowly and mean:
And scarcely less drear than the outer wall
Is this wretched home within.
The walls are low, and dark and bare,
The curtainless windows are small,
And the light burns dim on the broken stand
Casting wierd shadows over all.

"Mother," the pleading, childish voice
Again breaks the gloomy spell.
"Mother, I soon shall be gone from your sight,
In a beautiful home to dwell.
But oh! do not mourn and so bitterly weep
That your darling is almost home.
For brother Willie is waiting for me,
And soon, you too, will come."

"In heaven we never shall hunger more,
Nor suffer from winter's cold;
For no one can speak of hope or joy
Up there in the Savior's fold.
I long to see father and say good-by,
Ere I cross the river's brink;
But when I get home I'll ask the dear Lord
To save my father from drink."

All night that mother in anguish and fear,
Her lonely vigil kept,
And when morning dawned her suffering child
In dreamless silence slept.
But where was he, whose promise in youth
Told of a future most fair?
A slave to that deadly, maddening cup
Whose end is out death and despair!

A desolate house and a broken heart,
To the drunkard's wretched wife,
But Odium who wrought this cursed work,
A triumpnt and prosperous life.
He may rear a monument, tall and fair,
And cover it with blossom and bud,
But this terrible truth breaths from flower and stone,
our price is the price of blood.

A saloon keeper living in one of our larger cities carries each sabbath to the grave of his little child a bouquet of green nine flowers.

I hate the rum traffic. It burned my father to death after squandering his property as a rumseller. Trouble then came through sickness and poverty, and we children were thrust into the poor-house, and father and mother into the asylum. Who ever knew the Rum Devil to stop until it had finished a man and landed him in hell, unless he came in contact with some of God's agents and was saved? My father was burned with his last cent, the candle falling against [illegible] clothing while full of this nearness! [illegible] son and he was burned until the fl[illegible] dropped from the bones while he was yet alive; and mother was full of the same rum at the same time. Ah, what a scene there was in the morning. * * * The only hope I now have of my mother is to send her where rum is not so free.
